grid work

Title Page

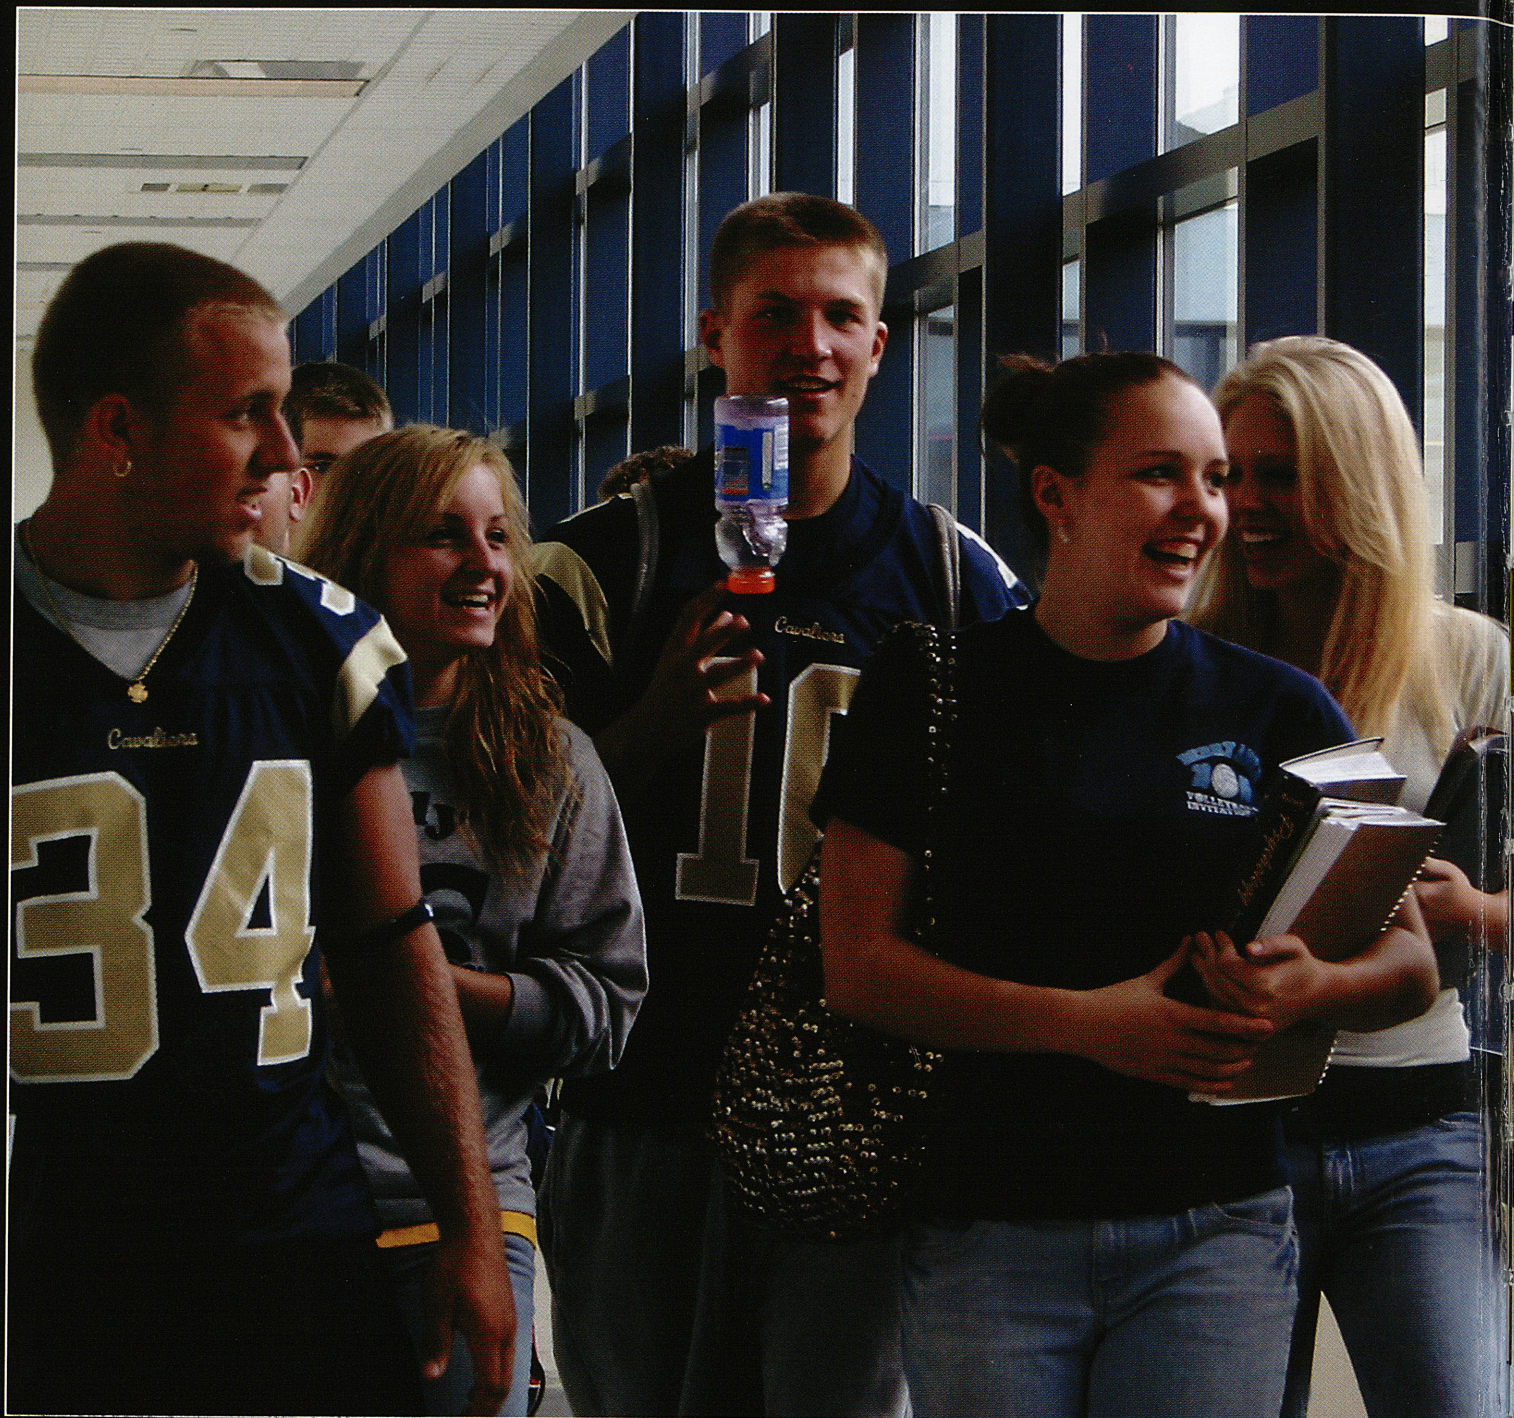

"As the new principal,
I hoped to lay the grid/work for every student to succeed."

Mr. Bill McClarnon

Opening

Dressed in their spirited attire on a late Friday afternoon, seniors John Hansen, Kelsey Engler, junior Josh Vick, and seniors April Covey, Kristen Evans, and Bill Walter stroll along the grid of windows between the lower cafeteria and the studio. Bill said, 'I really liked playing football under the lights because the crazy fans got me pumped!' Avid football fans visited the Davis Field gridiron on Friday nights in the fall.

Opening

We existed in this space and this time . . . We became the sum of all our individual aspirations and accomplishments. This physical space bounded us. Our personalities bonded us. The nexus of diligence and opportunity harbored success. We linked humor and compassion, laughter and tears to form friendships. At the juncture of friendships we found joy. Vertices defined the virtues of leadership and character. Inspiration unleashed a sense of wonder. We fashioned our own Cavalier experience and in doing so, formulated a magnificent grid/work.

Student Life

The high school experience evolved into more than just factoring trinomials in math class and completing the six obligatory writing assignments across the curriculum. More importantly, the teen years welcomed so many other activities and opportunities, each that contributed a path down the road to success. From community involvement to school spirit and the way we got from point A to Point B to, from, or within the campus, the students' lives varied vastly, each logistically complex and enigmatic. Collectively, those encounters molded young minds and became the blue/print for a promising future.

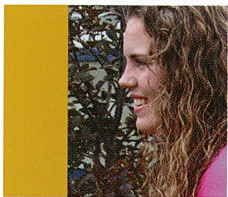

High above the field, the cheerleaders lift Natalie Faletti and Sara Rattay in their "Mirror Mirror" mount. Natalie said, "Cheering was sweet and I loved doing it." In addition to cheering, Natalie performed gymnastics and enjoyed hanging out with friends.

"On weekends, my friends and I lived for Mario Party."

Discuss your driving test experience.

"The instructor told me not to take my hands off the wheel, ever. So, I turned my whole body to turn the car."

Constance Anderson, 12

"It was my fourth time parallel parking. I was so excited that I passed, that I forgot to turn my car off."

Molly Cullen, 12

Perfectly balanced on his back wheel, senior Jake Shaffer pops a wheelie on his dirt bike. About this particular wheelie, Jake said, "I almost ran into my mom when she took this picture." Jake lived on Dime Road with his three brothers who enjoyed playing baseball, riding dirt bikes, and snowboarding.

Shining up the wheels of his car, senior, Tyler Slimick works hard to buff his '89 Honda CRX Si. When asked about taking care of his car, Tyler said, "I didn't drive a dirty car. I was embarrassed if my paint wasn't shining and my wheels were not bling." Tyler resided in Allegheny Township.

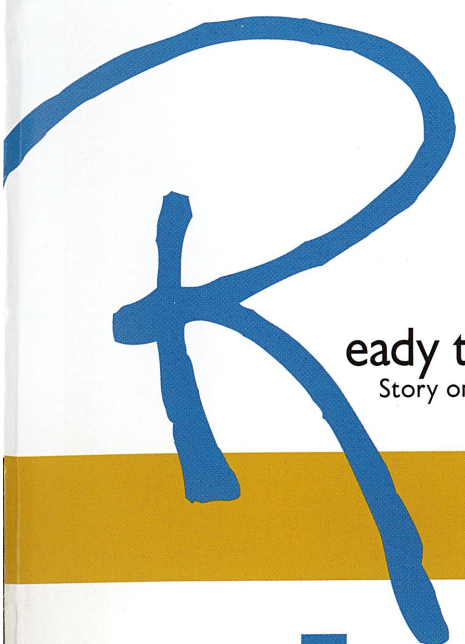

"I liked having my license because I did not have to ask my parents for rides."
Kristen Estocsin, 12

"I'll miss the people on my afternoon bus ride."

Ready to Roll

Story on Cars by Meghann Wygonik

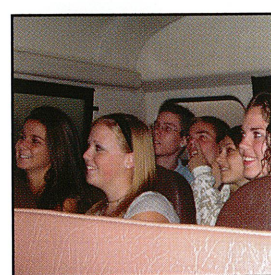

Nothing compared to the feeling of the wind in your hair and music blasting while sailing down the bypass into Vandergrift. This experience could happen to anyone, but for a select few it took on a whole different meaning for the few, the proud, the automobile owners in the school district. When asked about his car, senior Shane Hall excitedly said, "I drove the Cadillac of all cars. My 1999 Ford Contour was the car of the future. I only paid $500 for this four-door luxury sedan last March [March 2006]. Only half of my gas tank worked and the heat and A/C only worked on high. I had an accident and now I have a duct-taped rear right taillight cover. My car could pretty much literally fly and drift Tokyo style. Basically the ride was a true piece. What could I say?"

Others throughout the school had similar comments to say about their own heaven on wheels. Senior Crista Schindler excitedly said, "The spirit of Kiski Area lived in the engine of a '92 Taurus Station Wagon. Driving 'Shaggy' was always an experience. Never mind the rising gas prices because shaggy was fueled by the spirit of Kiski Area and her 20th century engine was excited by cheers." Even though the beloved cars of the district's finest might not sport the highest quality of running accessories, the cars themselves meant more to their owners than the world itself.

Equestrian Connie Anderson and Owen, her horse, peruse her farm, Painted Valley, near Saltsburg. "I have ridden horses for most of my life and started to compete around age seven," said Connie. Owen and Connie qualified for the 2006 Pennsylvania State Horse Show in English grooming and showmanship for the senior division.

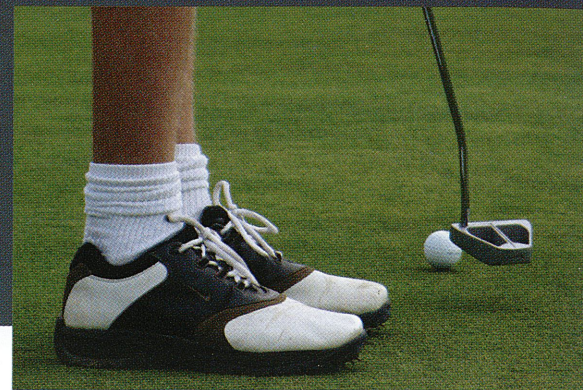

Living so far from the high school, the Windy Acres crew usually arrived in one of the last buses each morning.

Senior Evan Tobin performs an abubaca at Imperial Skate Park in Imperial, PA. He travelled all across western PA to ride BMX.

Adorned in Nike golf shoes, sophomore Josh Emanuelson takes cautious steps to putt the ball. On his fashion sense, Josh said, "I bought these shoes at Dick's Sporting Goods." He further said, "I chose these in particular because they made me look good." Josh played golf since the age of five and hoped to one day break a 38.

Purse-onality Plus

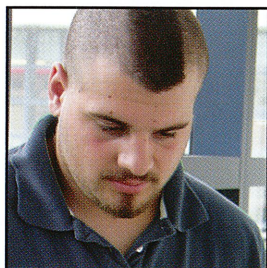

Story by Courtney Grafton

"My purse was the size of my life," said senior Torie Glasser, who proudly displayed her fairly large canvas tote bag, hand-painted to the likeness of Alex DeLarge from the 1967 classic Stanley Kubrick film, A Clockwork Orange. Her unique purse provided a home for her art supplies, sketchbook, novels, and CDs. Though not every girl carried a purse with quite as much pizzazz, every girl's purse told a detailed story about the owner, inside and out.

From bright green, zebra-striped totes and colorful, hand-sewn masterpieces to classy handbags and Coaches large enough to conceal a small mammal, the purse itself reflected the girl's style and attitude. Still, the real story of the purse lied within. Aside from the usual items, high school girls found other "essentials" to jam pack into their bags. School supplies, one (or two) TI-83 graphing calculators, the iPod, Chapstick, and a wide variety of chewing gum all lived in fashionable harmony inside. Along with the essential items, the most puzzling items found in students' shoulder-bags included a tennis ball, dental floss, The Zombie Survival Guide, a posable DragonBall Z action figure, and a wrench.

With matching purse and belt, senior Michele Kettering hits a high note in fashion. "Music was my life," said Michele about her personal choice for the ebony and ivory ensemble. Michele played clarinet for the marching band and planned to pursue both engineering and music in college.

Shaved on the sides, junior Nate Insko sports a mohawk. Nate shaved his head at band camp upon Mr. Pityk's suggestion.

"My appearance was very important to me."

Terry Despotakis, 11

Dressed in his famous striped pants, senior Stefan Lundberg epitomizes true fashion. On why he bought them, Stefan said, "Well, because they were original Diesel and I have never seen a pair like them before." Stefan also liked to shop at H&M, Urban Outfitters, Avalon, and other small and unique stores.

Hot Under the Collar

Story on Fire Fighting by Samantha Krotzer

While some students claimed they loved the heat of the summer, how many would say they loved the heat of fire? At Kiski, several students gave a loud "I did!" to that question. A select few young men from every grade at the high school offered up their free time to volunteer as fire fighters and EMTs. Dedication truly represented the only word that could describe these students. Every day of the week, at any given time, they had a chance of getting called into the station for duty. The fire fighters all said that they spent a majority of their time at their respective fire halls. Fire fighter of four years, senior Brandon Grinder said, "I took an 88 hour class on the essentials of fire fighting. On the final exam I scored a 96%, which was higher than the Apollo chief. I took great pride in that."

The extensive training definitely paid off. The young men knew how to keep their cool in heated situations such as a house fire that junior Josh Suvges helped put out in the summer of 2006. When conditions got dangerous senior Brent Derry said, "I thought about my Pap in heaven." The job might have seemed too risky for the majority to handle, but the benefits made everything worth while. These students saved lives and assumed the role of heroes, and what lady could resist a hero? Brent said, "I haven't met one yet that didn't enjoy getting rescued."

Ready to do battle, sophomore Mike Roberts hangs on to travel to the latest fire call. On his contributions, Mike said, "I really enjoyed knowing that I made a difference in my community." When not fighting fires, Mike liked to skate, play video games, and play football.

As part of training, most fire companies staged structure fires. Washington Township Fire Co. utilized the trailer as such.

Used primarily for brush fires and road debris removal, truck 102 transports firemen all over Washington Township.

Members of the court, Tanisha Wheatley, Ashley Thall, Sara Kanas, Amanda Moser, Natalie Smodic, and Blair Saul creatively display some pre-event antics. "I never realized how much effort and enthusiasm was dedicated to homecoming," said Ash Thall concerning the evening and its events. The funny-face shot of the girls has become a recent Homecoming tradition.

Aushed Homecoming Hype

Story on Homecoming by Meg Mszyco

On October 6, 2006 everyone had only one question in mind: "Who will wear the crown tonight?" In homeroom, whispers circulated quietly, asking, "Whom did you vote for?" The hallways of the high school filled with fervor as students whispered to the court "Good Luck" or "I hope you win." The court included Sara Kanas, Mandi Moser, Blair Saul, Natalie Smodic, Ashley Thall, and Tanisha Wheatley. As the game neared, the whispers throughout the school grew more urgent. As Tanisha finished her eight-mile cross country day, a teammate whispered, "Are you nervous?" Tanisha just smiled and headed to the traditional Homecoming parade, which she claimed as her favorite part of Homecoming.

"It was a once in a lifetime thing," said Tanisha.

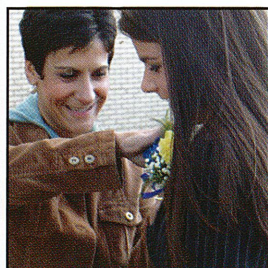

During the 14-9 football victory in favor of the home team, and underneath the crowd's cheers, the whispers grew more intense. Halftime rolled around, and the whispers rose to a buzz, "Who will win?" Suddenly, for the first time all day, silence resounded as the announcer paused. Through a very secretive chain of whispers, the announcer learned the name of the queen and announced it loudly and clearly, "Tanisha Wheatley." Just like that, the whispers diminished and transformed into applause, for the secrets existed no longer. The title of homecoming queen belonged to Tanisha Wheatley.

Always ready to help, junior Teal Smail applies last minute touches to the float designed and made by the Student Council. On creating the float, Teal said, "Working on the float was a lot of fun, even though we were afraid at times that it might not come together." Teal lived off of Dime Road with her senior brother, Tyler.

Seniors Jannene Wagner, Kaitlyn Karan, Deanna Klick, and Allyson Humphrey painted up to support Tanisha.

Student Council Adviser Mrs. Poleski pins a corsage on to Tanisha Wheatley's suit just before the traditional parade.

Last to enter the field, seniors Tanisha Wheatley and Steve Jones excitedly react to the announcement that Tish had won the title of Homecoming Queen. Tanisha said, "It was crazy! Even though I think Steve was more excited than I, it was an experience I will never forget." Tish lived in Bell Township with her short-haired cat named Kitty.

G.I.F - K.A.

Story on Weekends by Alex Nigra

The weekend, the ever-present light at the end of tunnel, remained the single most important break from the intense stressors of the school week. While field trips and early dismissals for sports provided a temporary relief for many, the weekend firmly held onto the illustrious position as the supreme refresher for the multitudes of drained students. The ways that the students spent their long sought after time varied as much as the students themselves.

Friday nights proved themselves as an ever popular night to go out, as many students found themselves seated under the glow of the lights at Davis Field to experience a home football game.

Visits to local hot spots, which included shopping malls and movie theatres, also surfaced as some of the most popular activities for weekenders. Concerning weekends, sophomore Rob Green spoke for many students when he said, "We went to my friend's house and skated, or we went to the movies." Video game parties surfaced as a popular activity for gamers throughout the district, and according to many, the thrill of facing off around the glow of TVs and computer screens remained unparalleled. Most importantly, the weekend charged up the drained batteries of students' bodies to prepare for the next week.

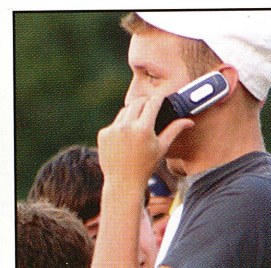

Ready to let gravity take its course, sophomore Zac Steele skateboards down a hill in Vandergrift. "I liked sitting on the skateboard so that it wouldn't hurt as much when I fell off," said Zac. Zac lived in Vandergrift and had three sisters.

Defensive tackle junior Aaron Retter attempts to stop the option against Plum on the October 7th away JV game.

At the away football game at Canon Mac, senior Will Land said the call involved his verbal commitment with Bill Cowher.

At the counter in DeVita's, seniors Nikki Golembiewski and Nate Goch create a pan of pizza. On why she worked there Nikki said, "I liked making money for myself." Nikki participated on both the varsity swimming and softball teams.

ff to Work We Go!

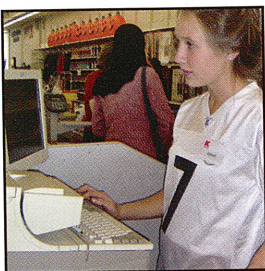

Story on Jobs by Josh Barszczewski

In an attempt to pay for cell phones, gas, iPods, car insurance, and various other conveniences, teenagers sought after school jobs. These part-time jobs, which often required eighteen to twenty-five hours each week, added a considerable amount of responsibility to a student's already hectic schedule. "After school, I went to work, and then did my homework afterward. The nights I didn't have work, I hung out with my friends," said senior Kelsey Smith. Surprisingly, some students, however, resorted to completing assignments in homeroom, study halls, on the bus, or even on well-deserved breaks at work.

While the busy schedules turned some students away from seeking employment, jobs provided fun as well. Junior Laura Tarpay said, "I've had too many funny experiences, like when the power went out at the movie theater and my coworkers and I took flashlights and slid down the railings in the theaters. A lot of my coworkers were my friends too."

Whether working out of the need to pay bills, or simply to afford the newest technology and fashions, student workers gained friendships, cooperation skills, and a higher sense of responsibility. These skills set the foundation for promising futures.

In Allegheny Township, senior Matt Blystone gathers all the shopping carts at the K-Mart. On having to go outside, Matt said, "It didn't bother me. It was just a temporary job." He has worked at the store for a couple months.

Manning the register at the Allegheny Township K-Mart, senior Renee Holden awaits the next customer.

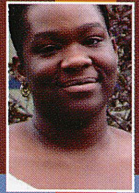

Senior Brittany Coulter fills a medium cup with Mountain Dew at the new Arby's in Allegheny Township.

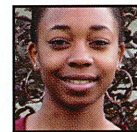

At King's Family Restaurant in Hyde Park, senior Derek Frye grills up a chicken breast. When asked about how he dealt with adversity, Derek said, "I took what life gave me and ran with it." Derek participated in the culinary arts program at Vo-Tech and enjoyed playing basketball and football.

"Wendy's had good food, and I got free Frostys."

Alex Betzel, 10

Revved up and ready, the Harleys set the tone for the Homecoming game versus Plum. "I loved when the bikes came because it really pumped us up," said senior Matt Vida. The team led the entire game and won with a score of 14-9.

At the Rally in the Alley, senior Blair Woolheater watches as senior cheerleading captain, Mandi Moser paints an "S" on his stomach to spell out K-I-S-K-I. After the devastating loss to Butler, Blair remarked, "I could not believe I painted up for that game." The members of the "G-O K-I-S-K-I" squad travelled over an hour to the next football game, at Canon-Mac.

"Spirit Day got me pumped up for the games."

Hear It, Spirit

Story on School Spirit by Meghann Wygonik

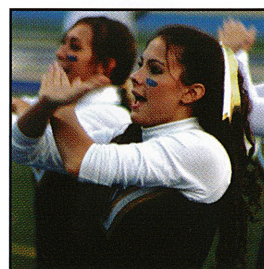

Under the glow of the Friday night lights, the entire school turned out to see what the team would bring to the field. The players suited up and the fans painted up. When asked about school spirit, senior Melanie Worek said, "We outshined other schools at events. Kiski let everyone know we had school spirit. At football games especially, we had a decent sized crowd, even at away games where we cheered, painted up, and wore all Kiski apparel. I would venture to say we had one of the best student sections in the region."

With each home game, the crowd grew larger, and it never ended there. The crowds followed the players from sport to sport and from field to court to show their school colors and spirit. From football and soccer, to volleyball and wrestling, the students never feared standing up to cheer loudly and proudly.

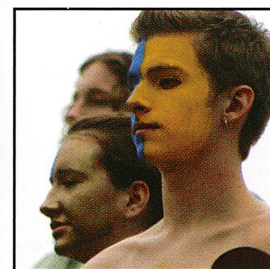

Proudly donned in spirit letters, the Cavalier Crew collectively joins to root on the football team before the first home game. "It was great having all of my friends together and everyone else who wanted to cheer on the home team. The Rallyes were something that I will never forget," said senior Amy Karafinski. Originating with graduate Joe Intrieri years before, the Rally in the Alley has become a tradition in Vandergrift and transpired at the Karafinski house this season.

In mid-cheer, senior Ashley Schwartz arouses the crowd at Canon-Mac. The football team won by a score of 43-36.

Painted in blues and golds, sophomore Nick Bellini ponders the next play. Nick moved into the district from Burrell.

Armed with masking tape, sophomores Grace Evans and Zac Steele post information about Homecoming Spirit Week. "Helping plan for the dance and the events of the week was fulfilling," said Grace. Outside of school, Grace lived in Washington Township with three sisters and a cat named Kitty.

Yield to Senior on Right

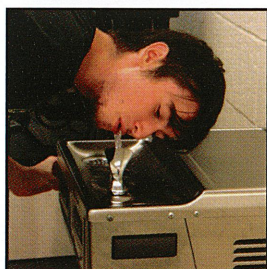

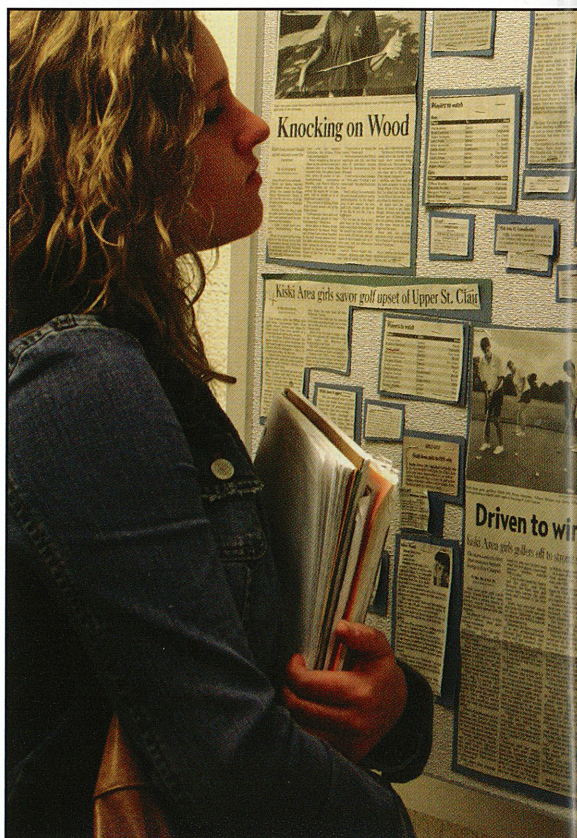

Story on Traffic Patterns by Susan Kessler

The true character of the student body showed not in its behavior with others, at home football games and pep assemblies, nor under the observation of administrators, but in its private day-to-day functioning in the hallways between classes. The distinct makeup of the high school came into view as students functioned like a well-oiled machine in the never ending struggle to reach class in four minutes and avoid detention for that dreaded fourth tardy they endeavor to evade. Watching students commuting between classes reminded one of a highway during rush hour, with students seeming to follow invisible road signs telling them when to move and when to pass. Occasionally, of course, the well-oiled machine popped a cog and real road signs seemed like a good idea, as when the group of conjoined twins in front of one just would not get going or a rotund and oh-so-confused freshman seemed to have lost his way, blocking the halls.

"The worst was getting to chemistry," said sophomore Emily Previni, "I had to walk through the atrium and it could get so crowded!" Senior Ian Mollick disagreed and said, "The intersection in front of room 101 where the one hundreds, three hundreds and four hundreds met was the worst. There were always so many people not moving!" Nonetheless, conscientiousness and understanding usually came out by way of a polite student allowing one passage or, in lieu of this, an understanding teacher letting one off with a warning.

In front of the newspaper display outside room 404, senior Tracy Turack catches up on the latest high school sports news. Tracy said, "I frequently liked to stop and look at the posted articles. It provided some between classes entertainment." Tracy lived in Mamont and had two older brothers, Dan and Brian.

In between classes, senior Shaun Eddy grabs a quick drink from a water fountain in the 400 building.

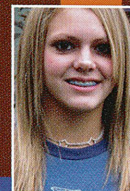

As sophomores Eric Hrovoski and Robert Hutton walk down the outside walkway, they discuss Dungeons and Dragons.

At a common meeting place between classes, juniors Bethany Serena, Bettina Vaccarello, Brittany Brasiola, and Kelly Dunlay sightsee over the balcony high above the atrium. "Four minutes was hardly long enough to get from one side of the school to the other, especially when you had to go from gym class to 418," said Kelly. Kelly, along with Terry Despotakis and Jenna Fannin, helped to raise over $64,000 to pay for the 2007 Campus book.

"I liked walking between classes because I caught up on all the gossip with my friends."

In an attempt to brighten the evening, senior Caitlin Floyd sings the Alma Mater at a rainy opening night home game against Butler. "I was really nervous to sing, but it was a great experience," said Caitlin about performing in front of a huge Davis Field crowd. Caitlin came from a long line of singers in a family with great musical talents.

High above McVie Airport in Freeport, senior Matt Rendos practices his solo-flight skills in a Cessna 152 plane. On why he chose to fly, Matt said, "My brother took lessons and inspired me to do so. My grandfather flew in the Air-Force and it's always just been in our family to fly." Matt hoped to acquire his private pilot certificate by the end of the year.

"In gym class, I did a twisted back flip and dodged three balls."

talented Student Soars Above Rest

Story on Matt Rendos written by Sarah Kramer

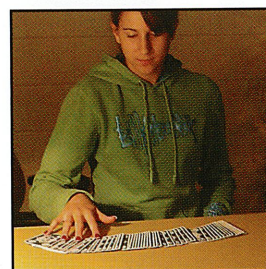

All year long, teachers encouraged students to soar to great heights, to aim their dreams toward the sky. However, for one individual, that phrase took on a more literal meaning. One senior's definition of soaring to great heights actually involved an airplane. Matt Rendos, having enrolled in flight lessons since February 2006, earned his student certificate to fly planes shortly thereafter. This allowed him to fly solo if granted permission by the flight administrator. Since then, he acquired thirty-five hours of flight time, which included three solo cross-country trips.

Still, Matt had to devote more than just time for this hobby. The endeavor required great funding, as well. Costing him ninety-one dollars an hour, sixty-six for the plane and twenty-five for the instructor, flying planes obviously retained more significance to Matt than a mere side interest. "It was something which I have always dreamed of doing and one day just decided to give it a shot," said Matt. "It was not the cheapest hobby, but it was well worth it." Although he did not plan to make a career out of it, he intended to pursue his hobby a bit further. Matt aimed to attain his private pilot's license and also an IFR (Instrument Flight Rules) rating. One aspect remained certain, however, Matt Rendos truly soared to great heights in every sense of the phrase.

Senior Megan Kiebler practices her pieces on the organ in St. Gertrude's Parish. On her most beloved song, Megan said, "Table of Plenty was my favorite piece to play." Megan belonged to Key Club, yearbook staff, and also SADD.

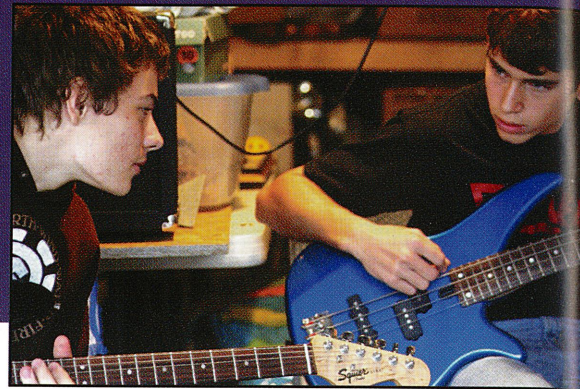

Ready to dazzle the crowd, junior Brittany Hansen fans the cards for a mind-bending card trick.

Super flexible junior Hillary Smith astonishes everyone as she puts her feet over her eyes.

With guitars in hand, juniors Dan DeFalco and Jordan Talmadge go over a part for a song. On how they put their pieces together, Jordan said, "Usually, Dan made a guitar part, I made the bass line to fit in, Ethan made the lyrics, and Chris and Dave just did what they wanted to do." When not creating music, Jordan enjoyed playing sports and hanging out with his friends in Allegheny Township.

II That Jazz

Story on Tuxedo Junction by Courtney Grafton

The typical high school student band usually involved a garage, some amplifiers, a few guitars, a drum set, and some angry next-door neighbors. However, a few boys joined forces to form a most atypical band, a jazz combo called Tuxedo Junction. Members included senior Joe Scheller on sax, senior Dave Traugh on upright bass, senior Logan Orange on drum set, junior Nate Insko on trumpet, and newcomer sophomore Sean Durkin on trombone.

As their name suggests, these guys donned tuxes and performed at private parties, formal dinners, ceremonies, and community events. Because these musicians sounded professional, they played gigs and got paid like pros, once making $100 each. They enjoyed the freedom of rehearsing whenever they wished, "which sometimes ended up being just a few hours before a gig," said Joe.

Like any band, the boys had their fair share of disagreements, like clashing styles and some controversy over the name. "I hated wearing a tux," said Dave. But in the end, the band grew close and enjoyed the gigs they played together. "Playing with Dave and Logan since seventh grade has been the sweetest experience of my life," said senior Joe Scheller. The band would always go out afterwards to celebrate a great performance, and often spent all (or more) money than they made at that show.

At Moondogs Pub in Blawnox, senior Kayla Slicker and her band, The Hormones, rocked the house with an original song entitled Bird People at the Battle of the Bands. Kayla said, "It was a great event because we got to meet other bands and could set up shows with them in the future." Determined by how many people each band brought in, Kayla and The Hormones placed second.

Senior Jesse Randall provides the rhythm for The Hormones at a local Battle of the Bands at Moondogs Pub in Blawnox.

Junior Mike Artman plays bass and sings for his band, HGM, on their way to victory during round four of the Pittsburgh High School Battle of the Bands. "I enjoyed playing bass guitar, writing music, and performing with my band," said Mike. Aside from music, he also liked doing freelance graphic design.

"I hoped to make it big one day so that everyone could buy my CD and say they knew me when..."

Living M.A.D.

Story on Mamont, Avonmore, and Dime Road by Samantha Krotzer

From golden waves of corn to the humming of tractors, where the cattle outnumbered the residents and the ancient dirt roads winded on forever, the outskirts served as the ruby in the rough of the district. Students from Mamont, Avonmore, the Dime Road, and many other bumpkin burghs in the area all had their own unique tales from their rustic neighborhoods in the boonies. From Mamont, seniors Ashley Thall and Rachel Mazanek shared countless memories of bike rides and mile long walks through every-which-way of the countryside. The bus rides to the outskirts bordered on momentous voyages. Rachel said, "I had a longer sleep on the bus than in my bed."

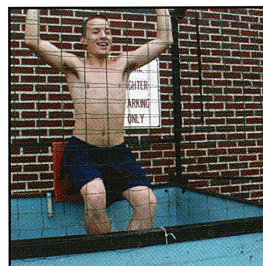

Add another half hour to that bus ride through the jagger-bushes and over the cricks and one arrived at Avonmore. The boys of Avonmore all cherished their skateboarding days in the yokel parks. The word small simply did not adequately describe Avonmore, as senior Cara Gray said, "The town was so small that everyone knew my dog's name." Sadly, the hillbilly life could not work for everyone. Junior Ben Crutchman said, "If I had to choose Alaska or Avonmore, I would pick Alaska."

Just like Avonmore, Dime Road gave new meaning to living in the boondocks. However, even the middle of the woods had its hot spots. Senior John Regan said, "The BP was great, Marty always kept the iced teas cold for us." Students from MAD learned the true meaning of privacy and came out of life with a background of redding up, worshipping the tractor, and prepping for slippy weather.

In her backyard, senior Jenna Atchison and her dog, Bailey, enjoy an evening on the swing. On her friend, Jenna said, "We have had Bailey for 6 years and she was definitely the most spoiled individual in the house!" Jenna and her three brothers all resided in the Mamont area.

With one last breathe, senior Bill Lehane plummets into the dunk tank sponsored by the Community Association.

On an early October Sunday, freshman Grant Pavlik throws the football to an awaiting Jared Atchison in Washington Acres.

Seated at the Waltz Mill Westinghouse facility in Madison, Pennsylvania, sophomores Cayla Turner and Sabrina Hyde put on protective gear to enter a mock bay for nuclear energy production. "We had to work together to build a robot that could retrieve a Snickers bar from the bottom of a bowl-like well," said Cayla. Westinghouse held the event in honor of Girls Engineering Day.

Story on Field Trips by Meg Mszyco

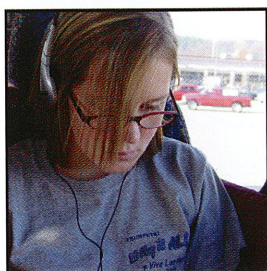

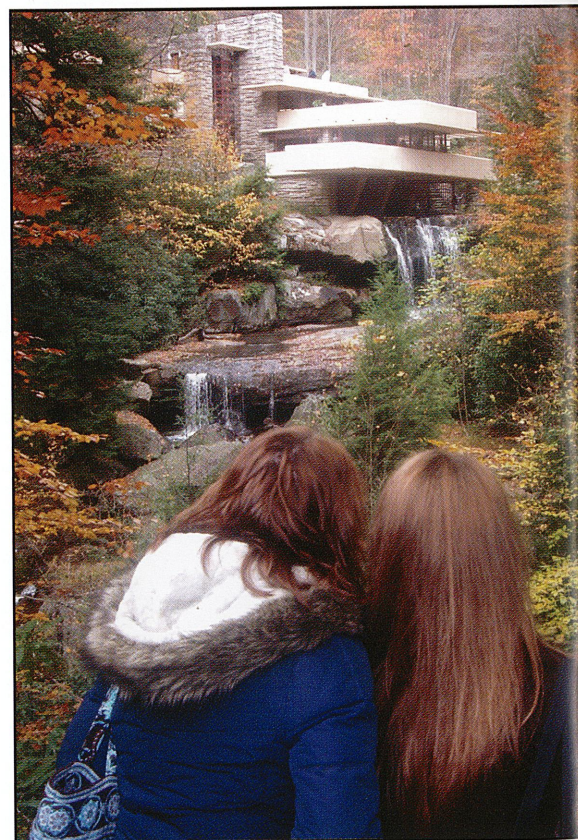

According to almost every student, field trips represented some of their favorite high school moments. After the dangerous and sometimes risky business of getting all of one's teachers to sign and approve the essential field trip form, a day of educationally enriching excitement awaited.

The field trips usually began with a mass meeting in the atrium, where non-field trip goers looked on and longed to belong to the club, team, or class lucky enough to leave. After boarding a bus, the group of students either expanded their horizons on a particular subject or competed with clubs and teams from other schools. Once all the educational excitement ended, possibly the best part of the field trip came next, going out to lunch.

Whether it meant Spanish restaurants for the Spanish Club, Westmoreland Mall Food Court for Academic Quiz Team, or China Lobster for a variety of clubs, lunch always provided a good time. Some of the most well known clubs and teams for vacationing during the school day included Quiz Team, Key Club, NHS, show choir groups, and Math Team. As much as the students loved school, the general consensus showed that a light sprinkling of field trips brightened the hearts of students. Meghann Wygonik put it quite plainly when she said, "We heart field trips!"

Juniors Kayla McClelland and Eileen Dudik view Frank Lloyd Wright's Falling Water. "I really loved Falling Water. I think it was great that the art students got to take a trip there," said Carissa Suveges. Set in the beautiful countryside of Western Pennsylvania, Falling Water graced the creek below it.

Freshman Katie Robson listens to her favorite music on the trip to Indianapolis with the band bus.

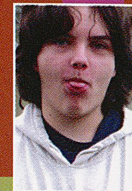

Student teacher, Miss Toscolani, and senior Victoria French attend a seminar at CCAC about their nursing assistance program.

Comfortably seated on the cruiser next to senior Matt Rendos, senior Patrick Burns watches Men in Black on the bus trip to Indianapolis. When asked about the opportunity to witness the best marching bands in the nation, Pat said, "I thought that L.D. Bell should have won because their show was amazing." In band, Patrick played the trumpet.

"I liked going to the Team Read Competition."

John Nichols, 9

Jen Zatko, 10

At summer band camp, senior Erin Pilat poses for the end of the opening song. On her favorite band memory Erin surprisingly said, "Get above the band tower!" Erin enjoyed physics with her favorite teacher, Mr. Desantis.

Dancing to the beats of Latin music at Día de la Raza, freshman Elyssa Beer demonstrates how to salsa to a crowd of watchers. On her thoughts about the event, Elyssa said, "It was a lot of fun! I loved Latin dancing." When she was not dancing, Elyssa enjoyed watching Gilmore Girls.

"Dance was a great way to express yourself individually."

Bethany Serena, 11

"Dance as if no one is watching. Dance is like dreaming with your feet. What comes out first is what comes from the heart and is most meaningful.

Eileen Dudik, 11

verybody Cut Footloose!

Story on Dance by Samantha Krotzer

The beloved Kevin Bacon once said, "I gotta cut loose, footloose!" Two decades later his sentiment still thrived. From show choir to marching band and from the Dia de la Raza to Homecoming, students definitely "kicked off their Sunday shoes." Having danced for 12 years as a child, senior Brittany Coulter said, "Dancing was a way to escape. It let people live the rest of their lives to the fullest."

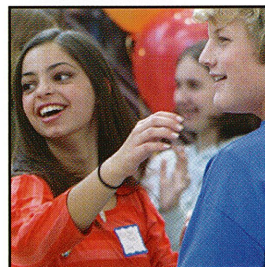

Throughout the school year, students danced in various disciplines and arenas. On October 12, students and faculty alike gathered in the atrium to partake in a fiesta that celebrated Spanish culture. Those who attended learned how to salsa and how to cha-cha. Students in marching band learned that body movement truly enhanced the effect and design of their show. Competition judges actually looked for produced pieces that provided visual accompaniment to the music. The show choirs spent hours perfecting their moves. Additionally many clubs sponsored events throughout the year that gave students a forum to express themselves through dance. Most students left the annual SADD club dance joyfully, while those who attended the senior banquet left sadly - after all, it represented the last time they would collectively join together.

Whether on the gym floor or at Laube Hall, those that danced realized "that life ain't passing you by." Even for those who did not participate, "Lose your blues; everybody cut footloose!"

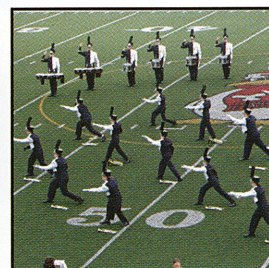

Ready to boogie the night away, seniors Ashley Thall, Jackie Salvaterra, Rachel Mazanek, and Nick Brayer put on the moves at the homecoming dance celebration. Rachel said, "The best dance ever was my senior homecoming dance because I was able to dance on a bleacher." When not dancing, Rachel served both the tennis and swimming teams.

Members of the band provide body movements for their ballad, Fever. Andy Toth, from Florida, choreographed the dance.

Elizabeth, played by senior Karissa Lloyd, Lady Jane, played by junior Katlin George, and the Earl of Hertford, played by junior Patrick Sylves, prepare for the Royal Banquet by practicing their courtly manners with the king imposter, played by junior Brett Badac. Karissa said, "I really enjoyed the practice banquet scene because it was so much fun to coach the prince into having proper manners." After graduation, Karissa hoped to attend West Penn Allegheny Hospital School of Nursing.

Prince, Pauper, Perfection

Story on Fall Play by Meg Mszyco

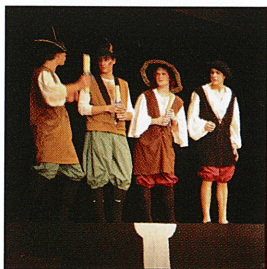

Under the direction of English teacher Mrs. Holly Jacobs, the cast and crew brought The Prince and the Pauper to life under the bright stage lights for three nights from November 16 through 18. Performing the timeless story of the age-old switcheroo, two lives entangled in a life-altering series of events.

Senior Lyle Clark and junior Brett Badac captivated audiences with their acting skills as the Prince and the Pauper respectively. Equally convincing, seniors Danielle Pugliese, Karissa Lloyd, and Shane Carnahan, as well as juniors Meg Mszyco, Katlin George, and Patrick Sylves all captured the essence of their own characters. As the story progressed, the peasant found himself uncomfortable in royal robes while the prince became just as unnerved in ragged linens. In yet another twist, the prince found a comrade in Miles Hendon, who ended up a girl in men's clothing.

As the story drew to a close, Miles and the real prince entered the scene just in time to put an end to a coronation that almost crowned the wrong man king. Similar to so many other tales over the ages, the story ended with lessons learned by all. Junior Patrick Sylves summed up the experience brilliantly when he said, "A combination of hard work, long hours, and the desire to succeed led to an entertaining production for the audience and a rewarding experience for the entire cast and crew."

In an attempt to humor the prince played by senior Lyle Clark, Miles Hendon, played by Meg Mszyco, pours water to wash Lyle's hands. On working with props, Meg said, "The props really enhanced the effectiveness of what we had to do. I especially liked the various weapons used in the fight scenes." Considering that she contracted pneumonia the week of the play, Meg gave three convincing performances.

The royal ambassadors discuss the mental health of the prince imposter.

Miles Hendon, played by junior Meg Mszyco, draws her huge sword against the puny knife belonging to Canty, played by senior Shane Carnahan.

Graciously accepting the King's offer to become his counselor, junior Brett Badac's character bows to the new king played by senior Lyle Clark. On learning his lines for the show, Brett said, "It was tough at first, but with a lot of hard work and practice, it all came together in the end." In addition to acting in the plays and musicals, Brett sang Bass I in Chorale and Bass II in Jazz Rock.

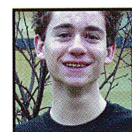

"The best thing about the drama was the people I got to work with."

On this thoughts about the challenge, Lyle said, "I really hoped that all of my fellow classmates would pull together so that the seniors could win." Lyle served as Student Council president and NHS historian.

Inside K-mart, seniors Chelsea Bode and Crista Schindler sit at a table to collect donations for the Class Challenge. On her duty at the donation table, Chelsea said, "It was nice to see people give so willingly to charity during the Christmas season." Chelsea planned to attend Loyola University in Chicago for Marketing.

elethon Continues Giving Tradition

Story written by Meg Mszyco

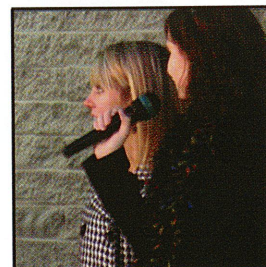

The words pennies, gift certificates, freezing weather, K-mart, and gleeful, smiling faces could only signify one thing when combined into one, the high school's annual Telethon. As all the members of Student Council and other various clubs gathered round the ever-merry K-mart sidewalk the donations rolled in by the minute. From joyous activities such as auctions, raffles, penny drives, general donations and fundraisers throughout the school district, the Telethon always managed to generate a substantial sum of money to donate to the needy during the most wonderful time of the year.

This season carried on the tradition most eminently. Many students presented themselves on camera to send forth their Christmas wishes to family members, participate in Christmas trivia, or sing carols. All those involved in telethon agreed that nothing felt quite the same as coming together and contributing goodwill toward the community during the holidays. Student Council President Lyle Clark said, "Telethon time helped to break the stereotype that high school students were worthless by showing everyone how involved and committed we could become." The week of the telethon truly exemplified the spirit of Christmas, and showed its abundance throughout in the community.

In the Salvation Army canteen, senior Jami Springer stirs the hot chocolate in preparation to give to the Telethon supporters. "I enjoyed working the canteen and helping with the telethon not only because it was a good cause, but because it was a lot of fun," said Jami. She lived in Allegheny Township with two brothers.

Juniors Aly Hileman and Jenna Pounds graciously accept monies on air from willing donors.

Senior Danielle Pugliese tests the hot chocolate that members of the Telethon committee shared with the community.

Performing as Chip, senior Shane Carnahan delivers his comical lines in the spring musical. When asked about his favorite part of his costume, Shane said, "I liked being able to play video games in the cart." Shane sang in various other school choirs and acted in several other musicals at the high school.

Tale As Old As Time...

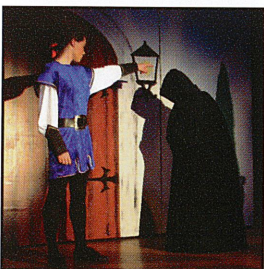

Story by Sarah Kramer

As the curtain fell and the show came to a close, cast members of Beauty and the Beast exchanged secret glances and knowing giggles. The final performance possessed a certain enchanting allure that left the audience singing catchy Disney tunes as they poured out of the aisles. Like any other theatrical production, the audience only witnessed the end result, while the cast remembered the tremendous effort and drama that had gone into every rehearsal. Some cast members stifled their laughter as they reminisced about the first time they heard graduate Steve Lucas attempt the high pitched voice of LeFou. Meanwhile, others thought back to the seemingly endless hours they spent perfecting their accents, or mused over senior Chris Dunlay's antics as he quoted Harry Potter movies and modeled his accent after Daniel Radcliffe.

The performances also bequeathed lasting memories and anecdotes to the cast and crew of Beauty and the Beast. An impromptu display of homoeroticism during the final performance left the audience and participants in hysterics following a brief moment of puzzled silence after graduate Matt Klingensmith hugged the stuffing out of Chris Dunlay and planted an off-the-cuff smooch on his inviting lips. On the morning of the second performance, Mrs. Rupert became a grandmother, leaving the students without a director until intermission. Senior Karissa Lloyd summarized the overall experience when she said, "It was magical from the moment it started, but not without its share of adventures!"

In an effort to comfort his daughter, junior Patrick Sylves sings No Matter What to graduate Alyssa Bruno. "In my opinion, Beauty and the Beast was a truly wonderful experience that helped me to become the person I am today," said Pat. In the fall play, Pat portrayed the Earl of Hereford in The Prince and the Pauper.

In the beginning, senior, Abe Waddell forcefully demanded that the old lady, senior Deanna Klick, leave his castle.

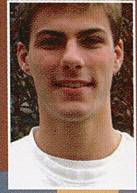

Members of the men's chorus hoist graduate Ed Newell high up in the air at the end of the Gaston production number.

While entertaining the crowd, senior Chris Dunlay allows graduate Max Moio, the Beast, to view his new duds. "This scene was sweet because the Beast was sad, and Lumiere and I attempted to be comic relief," said Chris about this particular scene. In his spare time, Chris enjoyed hanging out with friends and playing sports.

"It was my first musical and I really enjoyed being a featured dancer."

Brad Lookabaugh, 12

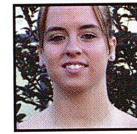

Any backstage antics?

"By closing night, the plate costumes were all bent from trying to squeeze through doors."

Deanna Klick, 12

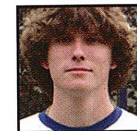

"Goofing around in our 'Be Our Guest' costumes. I was a fork so I'd go around spearing the cupcakes."

Breanne Derry, 12

"We laughed about falling backstage after the mob scene."

Kelly Dunlay, 11

"I accidentally broke a back to a chair. Another time I almost got hit when the background changed."

Dane Farrell, 10

"We went into the chorus room, held hands in a circle, jumped three times and yelled break a leg!"

Meg Mzyco, 11

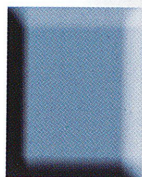

"I was on stage crew. There were microphone problems almost every night."

Danielle Dakess, 12

grid/work

life/line

How did hundreds of students from different backgrounds relate to each other, to the teachers, or even the administration? Simply stated, the answer came from within us all. In these four short years together, we did not measure time in numbers of heartbeats in our chests or numbers of breaths we took, but in the times our hearts raced and in the moments that took our breath away. These moments brought us together. We united not because we had a pulse, but because our hearts beat together as one. To share these moments with each other everyday made every waking breath worth taking. These people and the experiences we shared provided everyone with a life/line to keep our hearts beating proudly and in unison.

Everyone was friendly at Kiski, even though we had different groups of people!

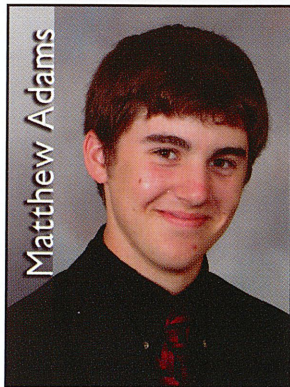

Lindsey Nies, 10

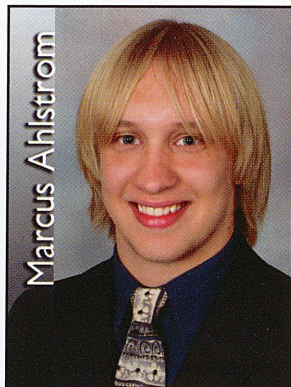

Attentively listening to directions from Mr. Pityk on top of the band tower, senior Drum Major Joey Scheller gathers his thoughts before another rep of Fever. Joe said, "It was great to get back to our jazz roots this year with the Vegas show. That genre definitely played up our biggest strengths." Joey and the band captured their 22nd consecutive Bands of America Class championship at Youngstown in early October.

As the chorus arrived at its final measure, a high note, hit perfectly on key by the voice of senior Abe Waddell, soared throughout the chorus room. As top dog, Abe became the superman of the Tenor One section of the Chorale. Equipped with not only superb vocal talents, but also a well rounded knowledge of music, Abe epitomized a born leader. Considering he had his first vocal solo at age four at a Vacation Bible School performance, his outstanding voice surprised no one. He also received much inspiration from his mother, who also had phenomenal vocal talent. Rarely becoming nervous for performances, Abe proudly said, "I had no kryptonite when it came to singing. Super Sonic Senior Steve

Mszyco Sets Blistering Running Pace

Story by Alex Nigra

Senior Steve Mszyco established himself as an exceptional leader and one of the greatest runners to pass through the halls of the school during his four years at the high school. When asked what race he felt particularly proud of, Steve humorously said, "Field day, first grade, I beat the fastest girl in the second grade." Steve broke many records during his seasons on the cross country and track teams in distance running, consistently finished as the top runner for the school, and peers found him an inspiring example. When posed the question of whether he planned to continue running after high school, Steve sagely said, "As long as there is air in my lungs, I will breathe. As long as there is will in my heart, I will run."

Whether on the stage performing or dancing the night away at prom, Ashley Thall claimed the spotlight. She began tapping her feet in second grade, and as senior, she continued clicking her heels. Throughout her decade of dance, she belonged to both Sandra Lynn's and Abby Lee's Dance companies. At Abby Lee's, Ashley performed her favorite styles, including modern and tap. Ashley said, "I enjoyed attending Abby's because she made you really love and appreciate dance, whether you were serious about it or not." Ashley enjoyed competitive dancing but also said, "If dance got too competitive, the whole feeling and purpose was lost." The Dance Masters of Pennsylvania, Ashley's most prestigious competition, emulated a beauty pageant. The criteria for the competition included interviews, multiple classes, as well as the dancing itself. Dance monopolized Ashley's time. However, it left her with much poise and confidence.

Black Belt Instructor Demonstrates Inner, Outer Strength

Story by Susan Kessler

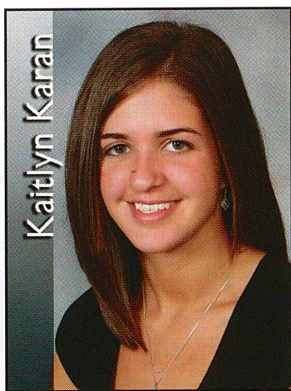

In a grand demonstration of physical power and mental discipline, senior Dan Mangus regularly filled the roles of student, instructor, senior black belt, demonstration team captain, and occasionally custodian at the Inner Strength Health and Wellness Center in Leechburg, where he studied mixed martial arts for twelve years. On his motivation for starting, Dan said, "I wanted to learn to defend myself and keep in shape." He incontestably satisfied those goals, as evidenced by his performance at the 2006 Kumite grappling competition in Monroeville. After an impressive display of cunning articulatory and molar manipulation, Dan walked away with a third place finish and the determination to improve that ranking in the next competition.

When asked to cite his favorite memory from martial arts classes, he laughed, saying, "Definitely seeing Joey Scheller get hit in the head with a coat rack. We were learning about fighting with weapons and our teacher threw a coat rack at his head." Dan planned to remain active in martial arts and hoped to attend Pitt to become a physical therapist.

Story by Josh Barszczewski

With the many burdens facing students in today's society, finding time to help others became nearly impossible. However, some, such as senior Steve Artman, continued to give back to the school and community in a plethora of ways. "It was the right thing to do," he said. Among other clubs, Steve participated in Good Morning Kiski, TST, and Mock Trial. Outside of school, he devoted his time to working for Our Lady Queen of Peace church at bingo and fish fries, VIP cleanup day, shoveling snow for the elderly, and a myriad of other projects for Boy Scouts. "Most of it was too fun to actually consider as work," he said.

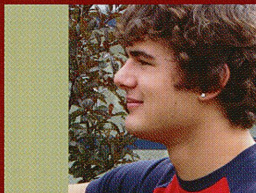

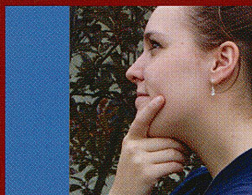

Steve especially enjoyed the eccentric TST staff. "When Scott Aber got his own desk, we always messed with it; it was fun to watch his reactions," he said. In addition to clubs and community service, Steve enjoyed camping, backpacking, hiking, fishing, and hunting.

Stellar Scheller

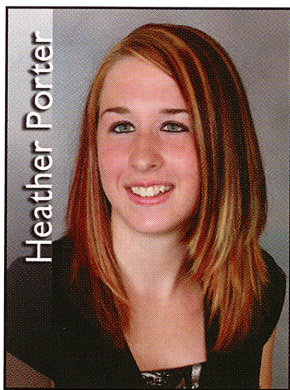

Senior Music Man Hits High Note

Story by Sarah Kramer

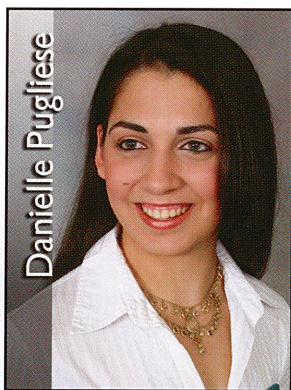

High school education encouraged many students to produce original ideas, but occasionally the motivational words of others so perfectly summarized events or people that no more personal articulation could ever prove so apt. Senior Joey Scheller, in the words of Winston Churchill, said as a reflection on his achievements over the past four years, "It's not the size of the dog in the fight, but rather the size of the fight in the dog." This statement truly embodied the aspiring musician. Joey participated in numerous musical ensembles, assumed the role of head drum major for the award-winning marching band, retained membership in the National Honors Society, fulfilled the duties that accompanied his title as yearbook editor, and still managed to find time to do homework.

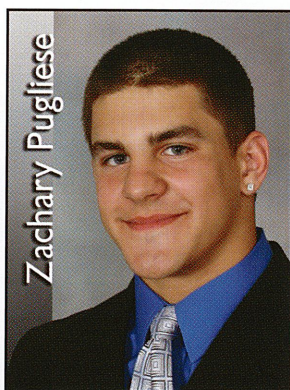

Joey accredited his charismatic character and powerful work ethic to many individuals. "I had the unique opportunity to see and work with two amazing music educators every day," he said. "Their enthusiasm was truly an inspiration for me." Throughout the year, Joe devoted much of his time to music, beginning in the summer with his duties as drum major. Along with daily practices at the high school, he also attended the George N. Parks Drum Major Academy, where he met four of his closest friends. "Being drum major was one of the most positive experiences of my life. The workload, though most times exhausting, made the exhilaration of performance all the more enjoyable," he said. Amidst all the extra stress and work, he gained a sense of accomplishment from his musical endeavors and hoped to one day teach music to others.

Story by Susan Kessler

For four years, senior Jenna Tallarom graced the girls' golf team with her optimism, her outstanding talent, and perhaps most importantly, her dedication and love of golf. When asked what inspired her to play golf Jenna said, "My dad was my inspiration and encouragement from the start." Over the last four years, Jenna made it to the WPIAL finals four times, held the MVP title in ninth, tenth, and eleventh grade, and became the Willowbrook country club Women's club champion. When asked to recall her favorite memory from golf Jenna laughed, saying, "There were too many to count. I loved how close the whole team was and how much fun we had along the way. Oh, and the whole driving pass thing was pretty sweet!" Jenna planned to attend Duquesne University for accounting and hoped to get her MBA and become a CFO.

The Boss of Toss

Story by Alex Nigra

Josh Vick Captures State Throwing Title

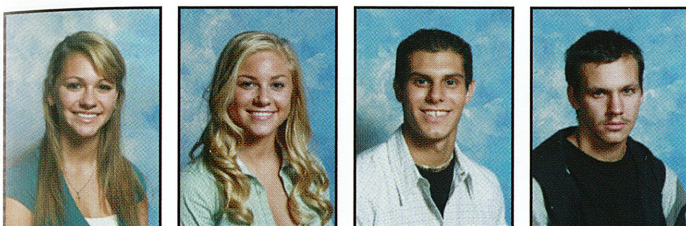

Well known for his athletic ability, junior Josh Vick set out to conquer the sport of track and field in the spring of 2006. Harkening back to ancient man's ability to hunt down a meaty mastodon with a spear, Josh chose a beast of an event, the javelin to become his own. Starting in the dead of winter, Josh lifted to build up his upper body strength. When track season finally rolled around, Josh, prepared to face fierce competition, placed consistently in the top group of javelin throwers at the meets.

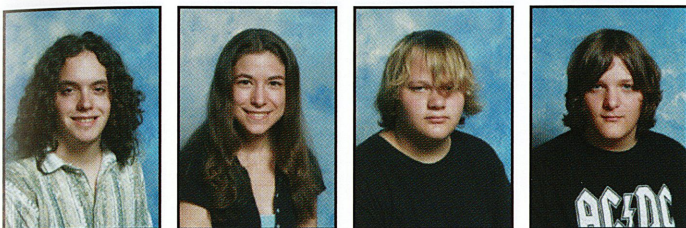

After becoming one of the elite few selected to attend the state championships, Josh changed his training regimen to get ready for the biggest meet of his life. Josh said, "I did medicine ball workouts and did a lot of form stuff instead of throwing a lot to keep my arm fresh." Obviously the change in training suited Josh.

After coming into the state meet ranked ninth, Vick managed numerous spectacular throws, earning him the elusive title of state champion. While describing how he felt upon earning the title Josh said, "It did not really hit me at first because it was so unexpected, but when it sunk in that it actually happened, it was unexplainable. It was a great feeling."

In front of a huge opening game crowd, sophomore Kerry Decker sings the national anthem. When asked about his thoughts on music, Kerry said, "You did not always need a fresh sound to make headway on the musical highway. If you were talented and had the "it" factor, then you were on your way." Besides singing, Kerry enjoyed playing golf.

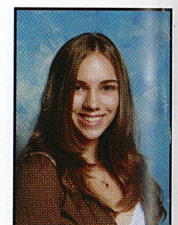

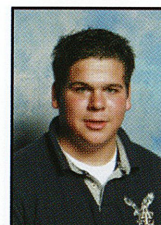

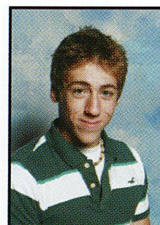

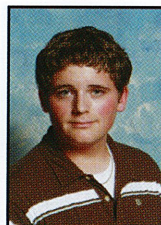

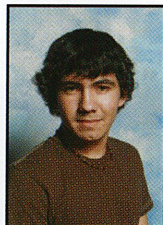

Sophomore Kayla Robinson turns around to kick the ball in a home game versus Penn Hills. "The most rewarding aspect of the season was winning the section title for the second year in a row making KA history once again," said the enthusiastic player. Kayla played soccer for 8 years and hoped to continue doing so through college.

No Business Like Show Business

Maria Scheller Receives Local Theater Apprenticeship

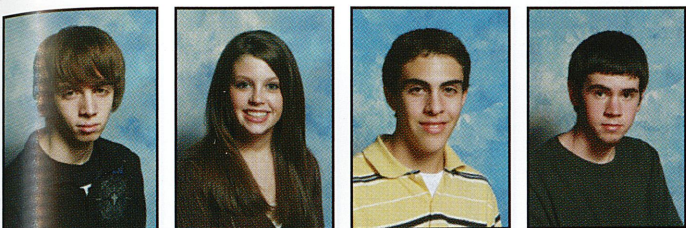

Story by Courtney Grafton

Behind every theatrical production stands a team of capable and cunning artisans, the ubiquitous stage crew, whose anonymity remains the greatest crime of the theatre. Sophomore Maria Scheller applied for an apprenticeship at Apple Hill Playhouse hoping to join this team, who greeted her with open-armed acceptance. For the entirety of the 2006 summer vacation, she and the rest of the crew worked diligently to bring imperfectly memorized monologues and dry, dismal dialogues to life through the mystical, esoteric arts of set design, lighting, costuming, prop placement, sound manipulation and technical administration. She found her place in the productions stage-managing and creating sets and props. As stage manager, she had tremendous responsibilities including taking notes on the plays, assisting the director, filling in for absent cast members, gathering all props, and making sure the show ran smoothly with set changes. Her job demanded physical, mental, and emotional strength, a tireless attitude, and an artistic flair, all of which Maria demonstrated in vast quantities, attributing these traits to the natural Italian chutzpah she inherited from her grandmother and her martial arts training at Inner Strength in Leechburg.

During her apprenticeship, the theater produced eight plays: three chief productions and five children's plays, including Jekyll and Hyde: the Musical and Frog Princess. "I did more work on Jekyll and Hyde than any of the others. It was phenomenal," said Maria regarding their biggest hit. She and the crew also "decked the stage out totally 80s to the max" for Frog Princess, building a Rubix cube and Tetris block throne and pixilated trees. Through the long hours and demanding labor, Maria gained valuable experience for her future, made lasting friendships, and developed memories to last a lifetime.

Sophomores Jonathan Zuchelli, Evan Gengo, and Susan Kessler join together to dress as characters from the popular Mario Brothers Nintendo game series. Evan said, "Steve Mszyco and Jesse Randall originally had the idea." Totally, 16 people participated in the Mario-themed costumes on October 31.

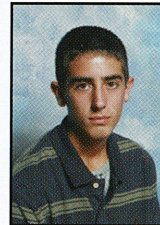

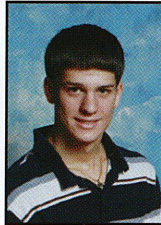

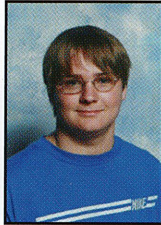

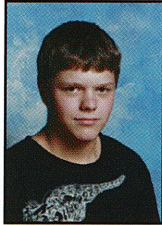

Staring at the ceiling lights, Emily Barker lies on the gym floor during Mrs. Kubenic's third period class. On her pensive thoughts, she said, "Why was I in a freshmen gym class?" At home, Emily liked watching Sex in the City and listened to rock music.

Just for Kicks

Story by Susan Kessler

Freshman Dancer Crushes Competition

The average person's foot, when kicked back towards the head with spine arched, may reach the base of the neck or perhaps the back of the skull. When freshman Kathryn Summerville performed the same maneuver, she could see her ankle upside-down. Kathryn started her career as a dancer twelve years ago at the age of three and has not looked back.

She began dancing at Sandra Lynn's School of Dance in Vandergrift but joined the Just Dance Company in Vandergrift during the summer of 2006. "I loved Just Dance. We were all friends there and it was a lot of fun," Kathryn said of her new studio. Kathryn took first place with Just Dance in the lyrical piece Come Adore Him and second place in the tap number Hot Chocolate. Kathryn and the rest of the Just Dance Company took high gold in both numbers. "It was so exciting; we beat some really good schools," Kathryn said of the competition. She also began cheerleading in fifth grade with Lancer's Football in Vandergrift and joined the seventh and eighth grade cheer squad. As a freshman, she performed with the high school competition squad and intended to further her kinesthetic achievements in both areas.

bench/mark

Driven by talent in the pursuit of excellence, students accomplished many goals then sought greater challenges. The curriculum stimulated interest in various fields of study. From Chaucer's Wife of Bath to Euclid's contribution to math, from Shakespeare's Julius Caesar to a Physics brain teaser, and from Mendeleev's periodic chart to an appreciation for art, the diversity served to broaden minds. Merit resulted only through sustained effort. Minutes became hours, became days, then years of diligence. No one completely knew the price of individual distinction, but superlative efforts demanded sacrifices. The proficient became omniscient leaving mediocrity far behind. Pride served as the impetus for school marks as the impedances had only short stays here. The best had become accomplished and the bench/mark firmly set into place.

"The average salary of Americans with a 4-year college degree was $51,000 and $28,000 for those without a 4-year degree. This fact alone made it obvious how important education was to financial success."

Mr. Zachary Jankowski

In deep thought at a Mock Trial meeting, junior Nicole Titler contemplates the case involving Anderson vs. Williams. Concerning school, Nicole said, "After years of not believing in the educational system, I have realized that rebelling was pointless. The one way to make a difference was through working hard and doing your best." Nicole listened to peace punk and ska music.

On district finances, Dr. Meighan said, "My greatest challenge was to provide our students the high quality which they were accustomed to and the opportunity they deserved, while being fair to our tax paying citizens during these difficult times." Serving as Superintendent for the past four years, Dr. Meighan has guided the Kiski district to rank among the state's finest in PSSA scoring.

"I loved having a part of the mafia as an assistant principal; it was like getting yelled at at home."

While some might think he orders a pizza, Mr. Gonnella actually calls a parent regarding a disciplinary issue. "I started off my day at 7:00 AM by calling for my pizza with extra cheese. Then I would call homerooms to send students down that I saw for discipline problems," said Mr. G. Almost impossible to pick, Mr. Gonnella chose his favorite Italian dish as anything with "red gravy."

Amused with the Powder Puff game held on Friday, December 8 in the gym, Mr. McClarnon put a lot of work into planning the event. On his motivation for planning the game, he said, "It has always been fun to see classes compete against each other in an entertaining athletic event. The winning team received bragging rights and it contributed to a healthy school spirit." Mr. McClarnon lived in Vandergrift with his wife, four sons, an English lab named Benny and a cat named Lily.

Principal Koter watches over the arriving students to assure their safety. Regarding bus duty, Mr. Koter said, "There was quite a difference between when kids entered the grounds and when they exited the grounds. Morning bus duty, at certain times of the year, was a great way to wake up in the morning without coffee." Beyond his duties as principal, experts in the drum and bugle corps genre considered him as one of the best show designers in the world.

New Man on Campus; Principal with Principles

Upon returning on the first day of the 2006-2007 school year, students met a new member of the administration dream team. William McClarnon took the helm as the new principal of the high school. With his authoritative air and imposing stature, he immediately made his presence known to the student body. Mr. McClarnon's plan for the high school became clear; academics would come to the forefront more than ever before, although it meant a few unfortunate casualties.

In the process of increasing the amount of interaction time between students and teachers, significant cuts occurred in the number of activity periods, as well as the number of pep assemblies. The number of activity periods and pep assemblies decreased by over 50 percent. Though many a student voiced disapproval for the new system, Mr. McClarnon established the new changes in order to help students better prepare for the real world. Limiting the number of clubs a student could join also helped to keep students more focused. A new reading initiative also formed part of Mr. McClarnon's plan for the students' success. Mr. McClarnon empathetically said, "I don't believe in bad kids, just kids who make bad decisions."

On twin day as part of Red Ribbon Week, guidance secretary, Mrs. Schirato, dressed like her husband and high school maintenance worker, Dan Schirato. "Dressing like Dan was so much fun! Dr. Hilwig looked at the picture on the central administration bulletin board and thought I was him!" Mrs. Schirato served the guidance department for eight and a half years.

Value of testing

Standardized College Boards Undergo Changes

As many college bound students had come to realize, at the basis of the college acceptance process lied the much dreaded and feared SAT Reasoning Test. The close to four-hour test received a fresh new look. In the spring of 2006 the College Board revamped the test by renaming the verbal section, eliminating all analogies, and adding an essay portion. However, not all colleges had jumped on the new SAT bandwagon as assumed by students. Many colleges did not accept the essay score yet, which gave students no need to fret. Guidance counselor Ms. Antenucci said, "Many schools used the writing section for placement purposes and not acceptance criteria."

Up and until March of 2006, the number sixteen hundred held a coveted meaning with college admissions officers across the country. However, with the new SAT's, a twenty-four hundred replaced the old sixteen hundred. In each section of the test, students could score a maximum of eight hundred points. With more opportunities to score points, came more opportunities to impress the admissions officers. In order to excel on the test, guidance counselor Mrs. Reynolds said, "Always get a good night sleep and eat a good breakfast."

Mrs. Antenucci lived in West Leechburg where she enjoyed spending time with her husband, knitting, and making flower arrangements.

Attendance secretary, Mrs. Patterson hands junior Alessia Pampena an early dismissal form. On her morning attendance duties, Mrs. Patterson said, "Some mornings became quite a whirlwind." She resided in Washington Township with her husband and two sons.

With experienced typing fingers, Mrs. Nix attempts to finish one of her many tasks as athletic secretary for the district. On her duties, Mrs. Nix said, "You could say I was in charge of cancelling events either because of weather or a problem in which the opposing school may have had." She attended Valley High School and belonged to the Pep Club, FBLA, and Prom Committee.

Creative Projects Enhance English Curriculum

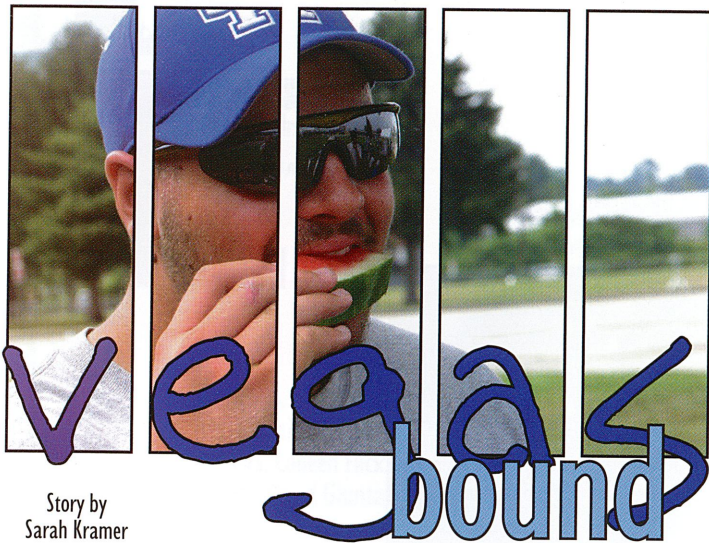

Amidst the oodles of classic novels, metaphorical poems, Shakespearean plays, formal compositions, and other mind-bending material, English teachers found the time to offer some more creative methods to analyze material, in the form of several very innovative projects.

In Ms. Columbus' Academic English II class, students had to persuade the rest of the class that a certain candy bar reigned supreme over all others. In order to do this, they had to make a video and poster explaining the positive aspects of their chosen treat. Students came up with numerous inventive ways to do this; some wore costumes, while others acted out elaborate skits. "Our videos were sweet," said junior Breanna Coward.

Mrs. Jacob's Honors English II students had an offbeat project of their own relating to the famous novel The Scarlet Letter by Nathaniel Hawthorne. Each student had to wear a bright red A on his or her chest for an entire day. The theocratic Puritans in the novel required the heroine to don such a garment as punishment for her illustrious sin of adultery. This project allowed students to understand the character's plight and to sympathize with her in order to better understand the novel itself. When reminded of the day, junior Lauren Essel simply said, "I felt like a total outcast."

On a break during a hot day of band camp, junior Nate Insko cools down with a piece of watermelon. "I hated the guard cookies," said Nate about what he liked least about band camp. Nate played lead trumpet for the band.

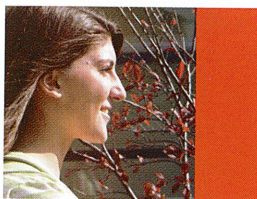

Marching Band Weathers Another Rainy Season

Armed with an extremely entertaining and visually appealing show entitled Viva Las Vegas, the band members and staff alike prepared to face the elements. They became determined to put 120% of their heart and soul into their performances whether facing glaring sunshine or torrential downpours. With such an attitude, the band entered their first Bands of America Regional at Youngstown State University. They won first place in class AA after a respectable and motivating preliminary performance and earned a spot in finals. However, the marching band never received the opportunity to take the field for a second time that night due to the rain. Even though sorrow ran high amongst band members, tears of grief that streaked down individual's faces turned to tears of joy when Mr. Pityk announced that the band had placed first after prelims and thus claimed the title of Regional Champions.

A few weeks later in Towson, Maryland the band performed the show of their lives and placed second overall. Senior Michele Kettering said, "I didn't care what we scored. At that point, there was nothing compared to what I felt while marching the show. I can't even put into words how exhilarating it was." The following week the band captured first place at PIMBA State Championships and finally instead of sorrow, their weeping possessed a tone of absolute joy.

Drill Discussion

"This year's drill was very different because it had a lot of different elements of Las Vegas like a slot machine, money symbol, and roulette wheel."
Liz Bonelli, 12

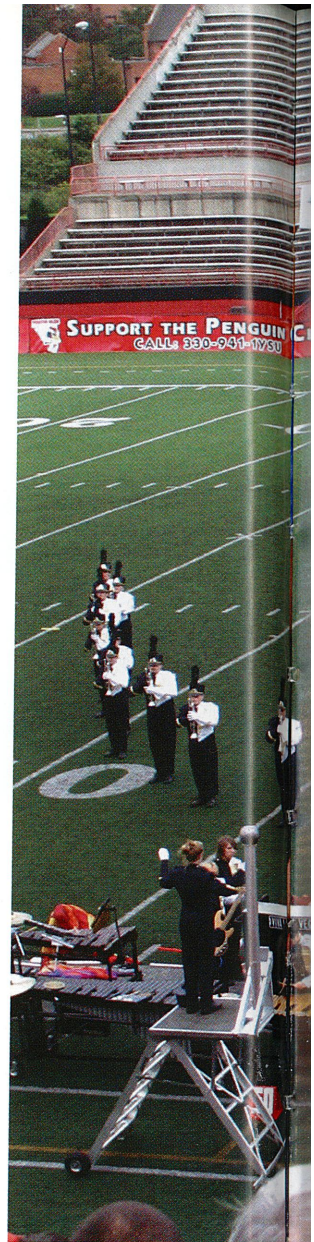

"It was tough to turn around in the closer at 192 beats per minute."
Doug Kirkpatrick, 10

Warming up before the car show, members of the colorguard go through their routine. On this year's costumes senior Sayward Beighley said, "Our show outfit represented flashy show-girls in Vegas, based on our show, Viva Las Vegas. We also had feather head pieces and top hats." The girls wore their blue outfits for football games and their affectionately nicknamed goldfish outfits for competitions.

A long standing Davis Field tradition, members of the band form the Big K before the football game versus Fox Chapel. On running onto the field, senior Kelly McNulty said, "A Kiski football game could not be complete without the Big K. Between the high stepping, slipping and sliding in the mud, and running into each other, it was always an amusing tradition." Kelly played the clarinet since fifth grade.

At Youngstown State University, members of the band form the final visual statement of the ballad, a dollar sign. On the show concept, senior Brittany Coulter said, "Money was symbolic of Vegas. So when our drill put us in the dollar sign, the crowd reacted ecstatically." With rain that lasted well into the evening, the Bands of America officials decided to cancel the finals performances, primarily due to lightning.

Colorguard instructor Lindsey Katora applies eye shadow to junior Krista Geary's face at the away football game versus Canon Mac. Offering advice, Krista said, "Perform your best and remember no fears, tears or regrets." The furthest game from Vandergrift, the band and colorguard traveled well over an hour to Washington, PA for the event.

As senior Joey Scheller allures the crowd with his sultry Fever notes, his girlfriend, senior Danielle Pityk allures Joe with her sultry moves. On providing the visual accompaniment to Joe's solo, Dani said, "Reflecting the Vegas nightclub mood of the ballad, my job was to draw the crowd to focus in on Joe." The band brought the crowd to its feet on October 28th at Norwin for a very windy state championships; the regiment placed first in the state with a score of 94.61.

Business teacher Mr. Schaeffer explains to senior Lauren Emanuel how the MLA style format influences everything she does on the computer. "I will always remember Mr. Schaeffer by his Control-z, UNDO IMMEDIATELY!," said Lauren. She planned to attend WCCC and then transfer to Clarion University for photography and eventually open up her own studio.

Concentrating on their assignments, seniors Kaitlin Kimble, Kristi Marsili, Amy Karafinski, and Sara Kanas type away in Mr. Schaeffer's first period Advanced Word Processing class. Regarding the phrase used most by Mr. Schaeffer, Kaitlin said, "UNDO IMMEDIATELY!" Very involved in school activities, Kaitlin served Key Club, Student Council, and NHS.

Lab Teaches Fireworks Basics

Every starry eyed child on the fourth of July knows the spine-tingling thrill of exploding fireworks in the night sky, and this year Ms. Krautbauer set out to explain to her Academic Chemistry classes just how people created these colorful summertime supernovas. "You could use any compound as long as there was a metal in it. I used salts but we could just as easily have used potassium," Ms. Krautbauer said as an explanation of the experiment. On the designated day, students filed into the room, perhaps mildly excited by the thought of the year's first flame lab, but some seemed more concerned about personal problems, wishing to go home early, or skipping the next period's test. During the lab, however, one could watch faces light up one by one as the flame turned bright fuchsia or teal.

The basic experiment involved a copper wire in a salt compound with one of several metals. Students then watched as different colors arose when the metal touched the flame. "It was really cool learning how fireworks were made. I had worried about chemistry, but stuff like that made it so much fun," said sophomore Chelsea Young about the experiment.

Tech Travelers Take Tiresome Trek

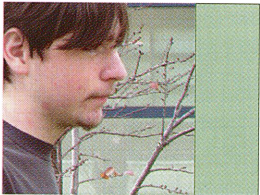

Each day started the same way for the majority of students at the high school. After traveling on the yellow transport for what seemed like an eternity for some, one by one, students arrived to the front parking lot and entered the big doors into the atrium. After the daily dose of Good Morning Kiski, most left homerooms toward their first period academic destination. However, for those students who attended morning Vo-Tech, they headed back out into the elements for yet another trek.

At approximately 25 past drowsy, a zombie-like mob of techers waited for the transportation to their daily routine at Vo-Tech. The bus ride to tech, however, became less than routine. The yellow school bus seemingly fused new life into many of the "just rolled out of bed" techers. Mob mentality took over, and each bus ride exhibited unique character.

Mr. Gonella said, "In mid-November we had a health emergency on one of the buses. I was very proud of our students for their quick response and communication during such a crisis." Though the mob may have seemed rowdy at times, they could certainly prioritize in times of distress.

Extensive Project Drives Curriculum

Driver's education served as a valuable tool to prepare teens for the dangers and risks of driving on America's highways, roads, streets, and boulevards. As a course requirement, students received the assignment to keep a journal of car crashes that took place during that year. Utilizing newspaper and internet resources, the project criteria required 25 articles, each with a summary that included how one might have prevented the accident and also which party caused the accident as well. "This project helped kids to see patterns and common mistakes made by drivers and it showed them mistakes to avoid," said driver's education teacher, Mrs. McAfee.

Although students had three and a half months to complete the project, inevitably procrastination took its toll. The majority of the students truthfully admitted to putting off the completion of the journal to the week or for the more foolhardy, several days before its due date. A few students avoided this night-before scramble by pacing the project effectively. Recalling one of the most extreme cases of procrastination, Mrs. McAfee said, "There was a kid who was really involved in sports who started the project on midnight before the due date, pulled an all-nighter, and still did not finish even though we had a two-hour delay that morning." In the case of this project, procrastination did not pay off.

Giving each other back rubs, the choir members warm up before they march in the homecoming parade. Tyler referred to a famous quote by Henry David Thoreau - "Marching is when the pulse of the hero beats in unison with the pulse of nature." Tyler further said, "Needless to say, we were ready to march." Throughout his years at the high school, Tyler participated in the fall plays and spring musicals.

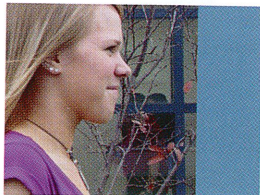

Marching Choir Starts New Homecoming Tradition

Contrary to popular belief, the plethora of screaming students in blue shirts stampeding down Jackson Avenue after the Homecoming parade had no connection to any homemade Godzilla movie. They also denied accusations that Mrs. Hampshire had attracted the mass as groupies. In fact, on that brisk October evening, the Kiski Area Chorus program participated in the Homecoming Parade for the first time ever.

According to the plan, the chorus would confidently and uniformly march down the street stopping only to astound onlookers with the tremendous talent and power inherent in the program, thereby proving the glorious rebirth of the program beyond a shadow of a doubt. "I was so excited at the start of the year because it was Mrs. Hampshire's first year. When I heard we were doing the homecoming parade, it solidified my excitement," said sophomore Kiersten Moyes. Unfortunately, one little mistake later proved a fatal error. "The trouble was that they forgot to hold up traffic," said Mrs. Hampshire to the women's choir as an explanation of what went wrong. Certainly, however, the chorus came down the Vandergrift street with a vengeance in a stampede that cleared everyone out of its way, all while treating onlookers to a bit of song. Ole!

Candy Corner

"After we ate half the candy, we got to throw a few pieces to the kids that lined the streets along the way."
Audrey Rattay, 10

"Somebody pelted me with candy after I threw it at them. It was fun though."
Bethany Howman, 10

Awaiting the departure of the homecoming parade, juniors Alexa Hannay, Madisyn Moore, Erica Liska, and Makenzi Moore stretch their diaphragms before performing. On her thoughts about singing in the parade, Erica said, "Rock on!" Besides chorus, Erica participated in KAndesence, show choir, and Chorale.

The ensemble marches down Franklin Avenue past the Vandergrift #1 Fire Department. "My mom, dad, and I did a lot of work to prepare for the parade. One night, we were at the school until about 10 at night painting the sign," said senior Keith Hampshire. He further said that the Hampshires wanted to make sure that the kids looked good in the parade.

Members of every choir join together to sing "Seize the Day" from the Disney musical The Newsies as they marched in the homecoming parade. When asked about what she liked about chorus senior Sam Curtis said, "The classroom setting was like that of a house, warm and welcoming. We had fun in there and still worked hard to sing our songs." Sam also belonged to Bible Club.

In full stride, the choir hurries to catch up to the band. On having to run, senior Deanna Klick said, "Before we knew it, the band had gotten so far ahead of us that cars started entering the parade." Mrs. Hampshire hoped to make the marching choir a homecoming tradition.

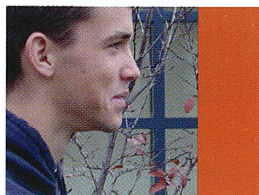

With microphone in hand, Mrs. Hampshire leads the singers throughout Vandergrift. "I thought that participating in the homecoming parade would be a wonderful way for the choir students to show their school spirit and pride to the community," said Mrs. Hampshire. Replacing Mrs. Rupert this year as the new high school choirs director, Mrs. Hampshire also served as the music department head.

Most students only got hands-on experience twice a week with those everlasting double lab periods of science. Just fifteen minutes down the road, students from the senior, junior, and sophomore classes got real life hands-on experience and a head start into their prospected careers.

For the past three years, Nicole Kotvas and Deanna Bulger attended Vo-Tech for Cosmetology. Deanna decided to go to Vo-Tech on her own while the influence of other Cosmetology students encouraged Nicole to start. Nicole said, "I planned to open my own salon in the future." The girls accomplished a myriad of goals, all while enjoying the experience.

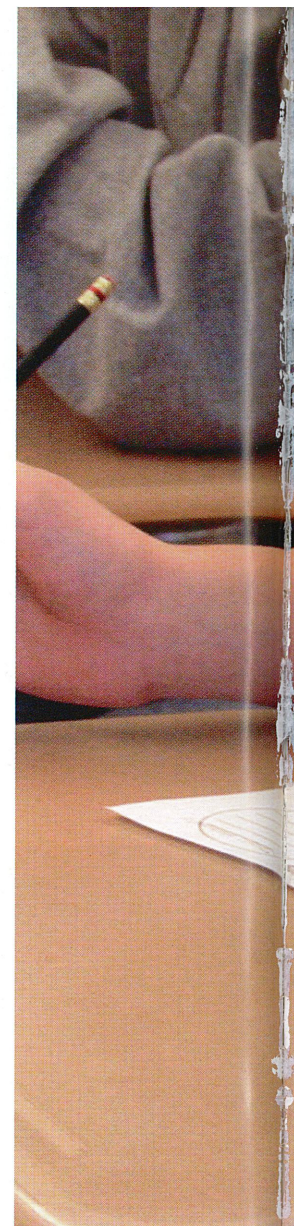

Deanna said, "The people there were fun." Another third year student, Ashleigh Miller, attended Vo-Tech for Medical Assistance. Going to Vo-Tech gave her a glimpse on what her future would unveil for her in the field. Ashleigh had already landed a job relating to medical assistance at West Haven Nursing Home while still in high school. She said, "I was training to be a Hospitality Aide. I will take care of all the elderly and give their medications." After graduation Ashleigh planned to specialize in pediatric nursing. Vo-Tech helped these girls and all of the tech students not only to get a taste of their future careers, but to gain an entire mouthful.

Teacher of Year Implements Unique Technique

Everyone could hear an ever-increasing rumble as they approached the four hundred building. The voice of Teacher of the Year, Mr. Jankowski, reverberated in the halls and that noise of learning created an incredible sound. Mr. Jankowski started teaching math at the high school in 2001, and quickly earned the position of everyone's favorite math teacher. Known for getting a little loud in the classroom, he said, "I just got really excited. I tried to motivate the students to learn the material."

However, he could also teach without his voice, a feat that truly seemed impossible. He once taught an entire career prep algebra B lesson without speaking once. "It actually turned out to be a great lesson," he said. Mr. Jankowski described his teaching style as the "unique technique," which worked extremely well for him and his students. He said, "There was nothing more rewarding then when a kid told you that they liked math because of you." His students not only felt more confident in their math abilities, but they felt more prepared for real life. Mr. Jankowski cared about his students, and not just the numbers on the papers - all why the 2006 senior class voted him Teacher of the Year.

Students Enter Black Hole Between Chapters - Function Project

Rather than the ubiquitous downtime that usually bridged the gap between mathematics chapters, pre-calculus students had a completely different experience. Lurking under the bridge between chapters one and two, a grotesque troll with the name of "Function Project" waited for the unsuspecting mathematicians with a massive club in hand, ready to pound the many different types of functions into their brains. Students in the pre-calc classes of both Mrs. Schaeffer and Mr. Toland faced the monstrous challenge of cataloging, describing, graphing, and doing calculations for nearly 10 different types of mathematical functions.

Unsurprisingly, the "Function Project" became synonymous with countless hours spent in front of a glowing computer screen, fumbling with equation formatting and definition typing. The project took both a physical and mental toll on students. Painfully recalling the experience with his own function project, junior Rob Iseman said, "After 16 hours of typing equations Sunday night, I got sick with pre-calc and couldn't go to school the next day." Despite the large workload involved, the project had its merits, namely permanently imprinting useful mathematics knowledge in the students' minds. Any pre-calc student would say that the interesting and often frustrating experiences with the assignment amounted to a project like no other.

Students Get Jump Start on Life

The phrase "one size fits all", although popular, certainly rings false when describing education. Instead of studying subjects that will not affect them later on, Vo-Tech students had the opportunity to learn practical skills and trades. Whether learning to program computers, to prepare and serve delicious meals, or to cut hair, these students had the benefit of getting a jump-start on their later careers. Consequently, many Vo-Tech students actually did get hired as part of their curriculum. Some found jobs on construction sites, whereas others began working at major companies such as Alcoa. "A lot of us worked at co-ops, where we went to work for half a day instead of school," said junior Maegan May.

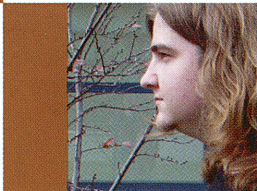

Although the course for Vo-Tech students centered on practical skills, many encouraged the students to attend college. "A lot of people thought that we couldn't go to college, but our teachers actually encouraged us to pursue all of our options," Maegan said. While some unfairly considered Vo-Tech the easy way out, students could not slack under any circumstance. Each area of study had a set of rigorous standards that each student had to meet in order to receive certification. Hence, while some academic students struggled to stay awake during their history classes, Vo-Tech students had the opportunity to begin their futures immediately.

"I love Kiski. I loved it when I went to school here and I love teaching here," said history teacher Ms. Burlikowski when asked why she chose to teach at the school. Ms. Burlikowski, a former KA student, studied Social Studies education at IUP and proceeded to teach for a year at Central Dauphin School District near Hershey, PA. In the fall of 2006, however, she started a new stage in her life when she began teaching U.S. History 9 and 10 classes. Her enthusiasm for teaching and the school district itself exhibited itself in nearly all of her classes. "I sometimes got excited and when that happened I moved around a lot. I had been known to run into desks and trip over chords. One time I accidentally hit a student in the head," she said.

The students she taught shared equally in her zeal, due in no small part to her interesting and unique assignments. Some projects included having the students write a diary from the trenches of World War II, designing a magazine from the 1920s, and the creation of a presidential cube. She said, "I loved teaching about cultural history."

Christmas always held a special place in the hearts of many of high schools students. For the Life Skills students, one field trip during the holiday season made their Christmas even more extraordinary. After compiling lists of the people in their family they wished to purchase presents for, along with possible gift ideas, the students of the Life Skills class accompanied by Buddies Sara Rattay, Amanda Richards, and supervisors Mrs. Mary Leezer and Mrs. Diane Donati, headed to K-mart for their holiday shopping.

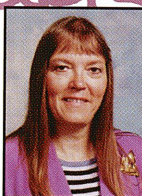

The students first enjoyed a treat in the form of lunch at Lil' Caesar's and then continued with their Christmas gift search. After the enjoyable task of purchasing the presents, everyone returned to the high school in order to proceed with the wrapping of the gifts. The Life Skills students expressed gratitude for their helpers, who helped with all aspects of the Christmas activity. "Sara helped me find things and wrap the presents," said Harold Brothers. The field trip evoked many positive sentiments from the students. "It was lots of fun," said Erika Weyandt, whose words echoed the feelings of all the Life Skills students. Tech Experience Tends Drops Stress Levels

Stress existed for every student throughout the course of the school year, varying in degree for each individual. For some students, their escape of the anxiety of school became another form of education, traveling off campus for an entirely different experience. Those students enrolled in Vo-Tech worked mainly with "hands-on" projects, lending to more interesting and less monotonous schoolwork, as well as a lessened level of stress. Senior Nicole Kotvas said, "Trying to get all my work done before the end of the school year was stressful. But my stress was most definitely lessened when I went to Vo-Tech; it have me something to look forward to."

Even the stress involved with searching for a future career lessened with involvement in Tech. Students merely had to maintain certain academic requirements. Junior Franco Gaccetta said, "If you got good grades at Vo-Tech, they set up a job in a related field for you." Ultimately, not only did the stress level decrease, but benefits such as the organization of a vocation motivated students to excel. The students of Vo-Tech evaded the pressures of traditional school through an alternate form of education, and their stories remained the same; they loved it.

Nutrition Changes Met With Mixed Reaction

It didn't take students too long to notice some key changes in the cafeteria food. Suddenly the vending machines offered only water, juices and other healthy drinks, with no more soda, and no more potato chips or other fatty snacks. While these changes met state guidelines, they also met mixed feelings. "I thought it was pretty dumb. If people couldn't control themselves, that was a personal problem and shouldn't have been inflicted on the rest of us," said sophomore Mary Claire Wesolosky when asked her opinion on the new cafeteria restrictions. Sophomore Kiersten Moyes disagreed saying, "I thought it was a good change. People in our school faced problems with nutrition and it was less of a temptation when the really fatty, but also really enticing munchies, weren't around to lure them into their seductive web of calories." Reflecting a teacher's view, Mr. Lohr's gave his wisdom when he said, "I thought in this case we all needed to stop and think of what Squanto would do in this situation. I haven't a doubt that he would create a solution fair and tasty for all, much like when he saved the sorry hides of the pilgrims with cunning, and native knowledge." Regardless of one's stance on the issue, the changes will remain for the better for some, and for the worse for others.

The winding and often rocky road of high school constantly threw new curve balls and hurdles at the students who often wished for the road to even out so they could take a calm run and enjoy the scenery. All faced the momentous times of their lives with a game/plan, sometimes in their hands, always in their minds. Whether setting up a pre-volleyball game/plan, or studying to ace a physics test, the students always fared well because they came prepared. Even with their fair share of bumps and bruises, the students possessed the ability to make a splash in the real world at the end of their high school careers. From the two-minute drill to practicing math skills, all students formulated a game/plan for success in all aspects of their lives.

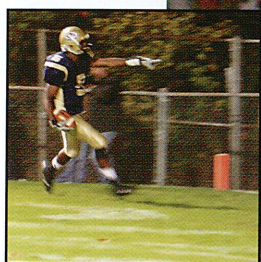

"Athletics at Kiski has a long tradition of excellence. The success obtained through hard work and competition transcended the playing field into life's obstacles and challenges."

Performing a power half with ease, senior Jon Moore envisions victory over his Norwin opponent. On Jon's favorite quote of head coach Chuck Tursky, Jon said, "Coach would always say, 'Are you freakin' kidding me?'" Jon ate, cut weight, and watched Thunder-Cats in his Allegheny Township residence.

In celebration of his 50-yard touchdown, junior James O'Quinn points at the fans along the fence. "Terrell Owens made me look good," said James. He was a member of Student Council and Pride Club.

Lining up the ball, senior Chris Dunlay opens the game with a kickoff. On his kicking experience, Chris said, "Kicking balls was cooler than people thought." Chris lived in Allegheny Township with one brother and two sisters.

Pumped up after a touchdown, senior Don Mignogna chest bumps junior James O'Quinn. On James' score, Donny said, "Good job bud." On his favorite teachers, Don picked Mrs. Schaeffer and Mr. Lohr.

On the line at the game against Butler, senior Matt Vida eyes his opponent while in his defensive stance. "The football season was tough, but we worked hard and had many successes," said Matt. Vida avidly watched The Simpsons and loved making stops at Taco Bell.

Running up the Butler sideline, senior Mike Andring attempts to score on the first pass of the season. "I looked good, I played good," said Mike. Mike lived in Vandergrift with his four cats named Rock, Missy, Key Key, and Peaches.

Plowing over his Plum opponents, senior Zak Pugliese runs the ball. When asked about his feelings on Plum, Zak said, "I hated Plum; they wore purple!" Outside of school, Zak fished, weight-lifted and hung out with his friends.

The JV football team respectfully shakes hands with Seneca Valley after their 12th straight win from the previous year. On the season, junior Aaron Retter said, "This year, we really gelled together as a team both on the field and in the locker room." Aaron also played on the varsity baseball team.

Players Pump Up Pre-Game Style

One would think that the boisterous bunch that makes up the football team would have a particularly rowdy way of getting ready for the next big game. However, upon closer inspection, it appeared that the key for pre-game prep involved concentration. The pre-game rituals started with everyone in the locker room focusing on their task, and then proceeded to a team prayer. Music also helped some to concentrate. Junior Ryan Ridenour said, "We didn't really have a song exactly to listen to. On home game weeks, we would listen to a CD that we made prior to the game." While superstitions certainly did not abound, some players felt it necessary to keep certain routines the same way. Ryan said, "One absolute must do for myself was always have the socks on first. That was pretty important."

On the field, the excitement first visibly manifested itself in the famously puzzling jumping up and down in a circle. To settle once and for all the mystery of this massive mob, Zak Murdock said, "We all huddled up and started jumping, then someone said 'One, Two, Three,' and we all said 'KA,' then someone said 'Four, Five, Six' and we said 'All Day!'"

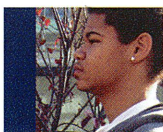

"I called my uncle up and rubbed it in his face because he loved the Ravens."

How did you personally celebrate the Steeler's Super Bowl victory?

In mid stride, seniors Michelle Erb and Tanisha Wheatley round the bend during a track workout. Tanisha said, "Cross country was real sweet, especially our crazy sleep-overs." Members of the senior class elected Tish as their homecoming queen.

Members Encounter Close Calls with Nature

Story by:
Alex Nigra

Even though cross country involved little contact with the other athletes during the competitions, many runners had experiences that would make even the most battle hardened lineman whimper. So close to nature in many of their runs, encounters with wild animals abounded. Junior Anthony Zanotti recalled a particularly close encounter with a bear while doing a training run at the high school. Anthony said, "I saw a huge black bear on the soccer fields and made a mad dash back to the track."

Many runners recounted the time senior, Steve Mszyco, almost had a head on collision with a bewildered buck during a meet, almost causing a pile up at the front of the pack. Sometimes the rendezvous with animals lasted for longer than a second. Junior Nick Higgins reminisced about a training run at St. Francis University in which a strange dog started to run with the lead pack of runners. He said, "The dog ran the entire six mile run with us, and then did four hills after." From close calls to running with the animals, cross country proved extremely enjoyable for the athletes.

Getting ready for the meet against Penn Hills at Boyce Park, members of the cross country team do some light striders before the race. Concerning the hilly course, senior Steve Mszyczo said, "It was voted the hardest course in PA... I guess it wasn't that bad." Steve became a regular at the state meet, and broke the cross country school record this year.

In preparation for their meet in Boyce Park against Penn Hills, sophomore Tyler Kiebler helps sophomore Chris Stankay to stretch. "I needed a good stretch because my legs were tight, but I think Tyler tried to rip my leg off," said Chris. In addition to running cross country, Chris participated in track and chorus.

Racing in a dual meet, where the girls got to compete against the boys, seniors Tanisha Wheatley and Michelle Erb keep pace with a Penn Hills runner. Michelle's words of advice included, "Don't be afraid to push your dreams through to the limit." Michelle chose her coach, Mr. Argyos, as her favorite teacher.

Members of the girls' cross country team huddle in their "happy circle" before their race. On why the girls chose this pre-race antic, senior Katelyn Kendle said, "We focused on the race before us and thought positively." Katelyn enjoyed watching Penn State football games on the weekends.

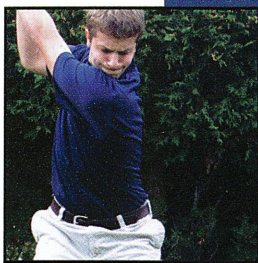

With the wind blowing against him, junior Alex Nigra races ahead. When asked about his favorite workout, Alex said, "Everyone loved team runs, especially because you could always count on a good laugh during 'Storytime.'" Alex resided in Washington Township with one older brother named Mike.

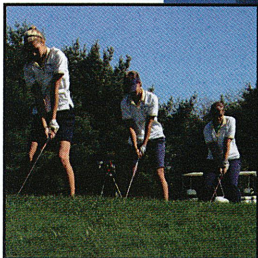

Swiftly running down the hill, juniors Pat Dalsass and Anthony Zanotti, and sophomores Tyler Kiebler and Robert Green head toward the finish line at Boyce Park. Anthony said, "The boys' team did very well in the meet against Penn Hills." Anthony lived in Hyde Park and had a dog named Cody.

On the first tee, senior Blair Woolheater winds up to hit his famous 300 yard drive to intimidate his Shadyside opponents. On his season, Blair said, "Although we barely missed the playoffs, we still had a good season." Blair planned to attend a four-year university and later medical school to become an orthopedic surgeon.

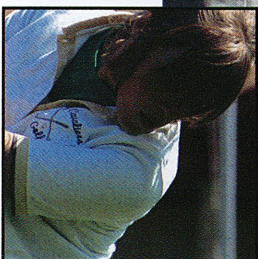

On the driving range, freshman Tori Hepler and juniors Krista Matarrese and Sydney Martier warm up before their match. On the team's "little all-star," Tori said, "Jenna was the best teen golfer I knew and I looked up to her." Tori liked to eat at Gardá's.

Ready to follow through, sophomore Jared Huth keeps his eye focused on the ball. "It was my first year participating in golf and I will definitely play again next year," said Jared. When not practicing or competing on the greens, he enjoyed watching Family Guy on the FOX network.

Warming up before an important match, junior Sydney Martier practices her golf swing. On her striking demeanor, Sydney said, "I tended to make weird faces while I swung." After graduation, Syd hoped to reside in a city far from western Pennsylvania.

Avidly concentrating on his swing, Josh Emanuelson practices his putting. "It was a tough season. But, with a lot of time on the course, it gave me a lot of challenges and fun times with laughs and new friends," Josh said. He hoped to live in Canada someday.

On the putting green, senior Jenna Tallarom smooths out her putting stroke before the Fox Chapel match. "The year was amazing. We all got along great and I walked away with priceless memories about everyone," said Jenna. She started playing golf with her father at the age of eight.

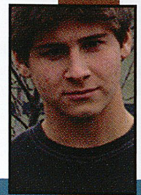

Getting a feel for the number three green, junior Krista Matarrese lines up and prepares to putt her ball at a home match. When asked about her golf experiences, Krista said, "I never knew spending my Friday nights with the team would be so much fun." Krista enjoyed dining at her favorite restaurant with the team at Texas Roadhouse.

"The seniors made the season a lot of fun."

Brave Golfers Face Snow, Sleet, Humidity

Of all the outdoor sports, the boys and girls endured the most extreme variations of weather on the course. According to the team, they viewed a perfect day for golf as warm, sunny skies, "and no bugs," said Krista Matarrese. Of course, the weather proved to become not so reliable sometimes. Rainstorms caused unfortunate circumstances for the team, such as soggy grips on the clubs and slippery terrain. "At the Penn Trafford course it was raining pretty badly. I was walking up a muddy hill and slipped. My entire right leg was covered in mud," said Sydney Martier.

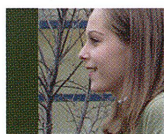

Even Coach Gibson experienced a mud slide at one rainy match. When it came to the threat of lightning, Sydney said, "I dropped my clubs and ran!"

Cold weather took its toll on the team as well. "The colder it got, like below 50 degrees, the less I wanted to play," said junior Adam Wood. Through wind, snow, rain, thunder, humidity, heat, and sleet, the team fought just as hard. "I'm not complaining," said junior Danielle Krivoski. She added, "We've had some of our best matches in the worst weather imaginable."

Awaiting the ball from sophomore Jared Barr, senior Jesse Randall gets into position at the Greensburg Central Catholic game. "GCC was a tough team to play and they beat us. I was glad it was not a section game," said Jesse. Outside of school, Jesse enjoyed playing video games and reading.

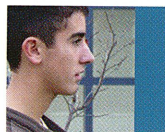

Soccer Hots, Nots

Story by:

When the soccer players caught wind of the word soccer, they became completely alert and their eyes glistened with excitement. The boys and girls soccer teams could not deny it. They loved soccer with all of their hearts. Soccer had so much to love, from the shoes, to the uniform, to the team, to the game. For each aspect, however, some favorites surfaced. According to junior Brit Lange and senior Stefan Lundberg, Adidas made the best soccer shoes. Lundberg said, "They were comfortable, stylish, and one of the oldest makers of soccer shoes. Most pros wore them, so they were reliable."

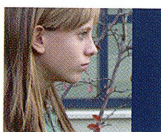

Apart from loving the game, a soccer lover also had some other perks. When the World Cup rolled around, soccer players really got into it. The majority of the girls' soccer team agreed that England's David Beckham won the award for hottest world cup player around. Brazil's Ronaldinho had the coolest moves, most said. Lange said, "He's the man." Lundberg said, "He was a master at elastico, the sweetest move ever." All soccer players hesitated when asked to choose their favorite part of soccer, because it contained so many lovable qualities. The top favorites included playing a part on a team, scoring, and beating other players.

Even though Italy won, who did you cheer for in the World Cup?

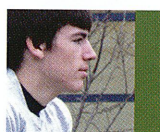

"I wanted Portugal to win because they had the best player, Cristiano Ronaldo."

John Trall, 10

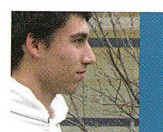

"France... They had good skills and I always wanted to visit there."

Stephanie Garce, 10

"France because a player from France head-butted a player from Italy."

Corey Jenkins, 11

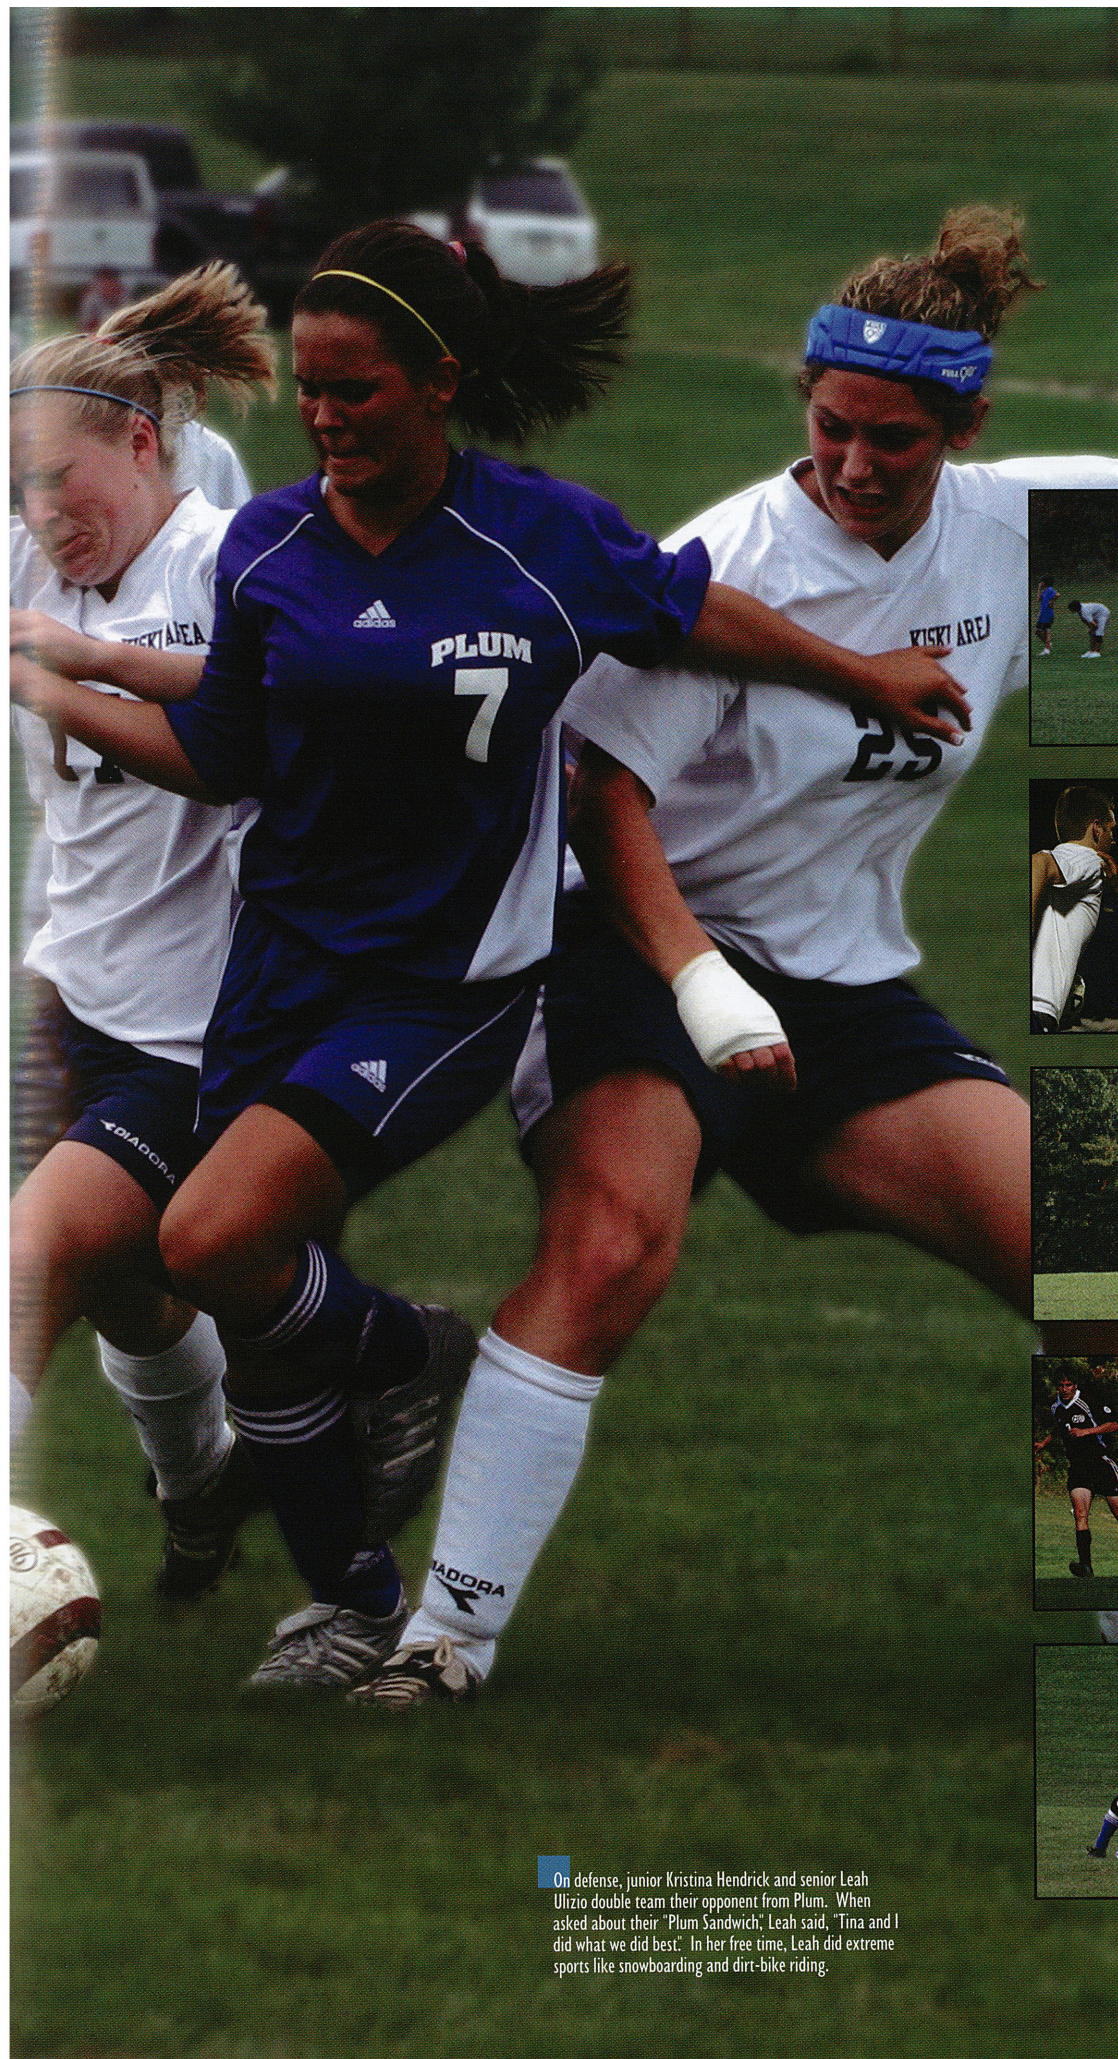

"Being Italian, I always cheered for Italy. They finally won."

Cody Eckman, 12

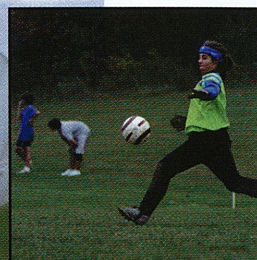

"We were section champs for two years in a row. My senior year was a blast."

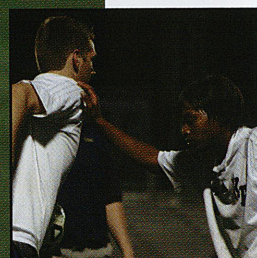

Krista Jones, 12

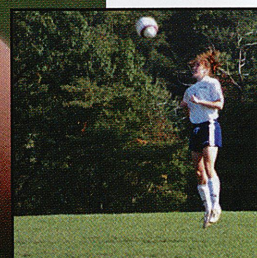

On defense, junior Kristina Hendrick and senior Leah Ulizio double team their opponent from Plum. When asked about their "Plum Sandwich", Leah said, "Tina and I did what we did best." In her free time, Leah did extreme sports like snowboarding and dirt-bike riding.

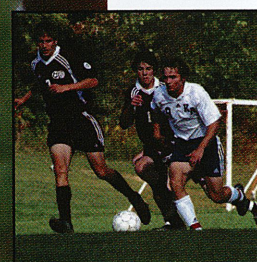

In full motion, senior goalie Kristen Jeffries runs to catch the ball. When asked about her best save, Kristen said, "In our Gateway game, the score was 0-0 late in the second half. A Gateway girl got a breakaway, but I ran, slid at her feet, and stripped the ball away." Kristen picked Mr. Barclay as her favorite teacher.

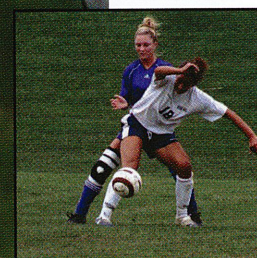

Balancing on one another, senior Chris Dunlay and sophomore Brennan Foster stretch their hamstrings before a game. On pre-game routines Brennan said, "I always stretched out before each game." Aside from sports, Brennan also participated in band.

Senior Krista Jones heads the ball. When asked about her best achievement Krista said, "We played McKeesport at home and I could not put the ball in the net. However, when we played them away, I scored two. This year was a career high for me." Krista lived in Allegheny Township with one brother.

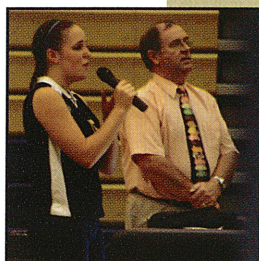

Rushing past his defenders, senior Stefan Lundberg dribbles the ball. On his motto for playing, Stefan said in Portuguese, "Joga bonito." His quote simply meant to play beautifully. Stefan went to England and Italy to play with his traveling team.

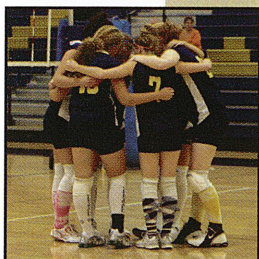

Bumping her Plum opponent out of the way, senior Viann Heder attempts to steal the ball back. On her thoughts about the game of soccer, Viann said, "Always play every game like it is your last because you never knew when you could get hurt." Viann planned to further her soccer career by playing at IUP.

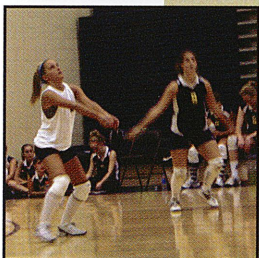

Senior Apryl Covey sings the National Anthem at a home volleyball game. "I always enjoyed singing the National Anthem before games because it got the team pumped up," said Apryl. In her spare time, Apryl played volleyball for Junior Olympic Odyssey and volunteered at Belair Nursing Home.

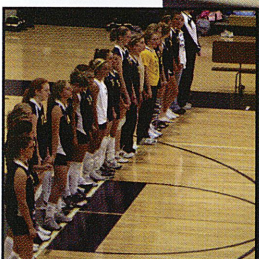

Arm in arm for a pregame huddle, members of the JV team join for a pre-game huddle. "Our team went through a lot this year, but we hung together," said sophomore Kayla Weiser. When not on the court, Kayla most enjoyed science class with Mr. Lemmon.

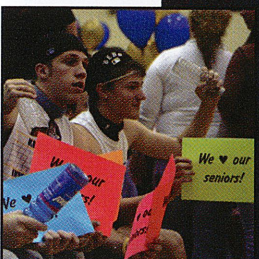

After completing a pass, senior Kelsey Engler watches the ball. When asked about her position on the team, Kelsey explained, "I was a libero, a specialized defensive player. I got to stay in the game the whole time to pass. It was exciting, but tiring." Kelsey spent her free time playing Ultimate Frisbee.

Hand in hand at a home volleyball game, the team stands in silence as they listen to the National Anthem. When asked about team unity, senior Molly Culleiton said, "We all got along great. The season was so much fun and I walked away with priceless memories." Outside of school, Molly liked watching Grey's Anatomy.

The biggest fans of the team, seniors Evan Tobin and Brett Belin, show their support for the senior players. When asked about his devotion to the team, Evan said, "I loved the excitement that volleyball brought me." Brett and Evan attended nearly all of the games and drove as far as an hour away to support the team.

High off the ground, senior Tasha Reid practices her jumping skills before a game against Penn Trafford. "I liked to block because if there was a cocky person on the other team, there was no greater feeling than blocking them," said Tasha. In addition to volleyball, Tasha played basketball and softball.

During a game against Franklin Regional, senior Cara Gray gets ready to return a serve. "The game against FR was truly one of our best. We all played well together and won the match," said Cara. She hoped to attend either Notre Dame or Bucknell for Pre-med.

Team Recalls Greatest Hits

Notoriously known for their closeness, the girls on the volleyball team executed tight plays on the court, but also maintained a tight relationship off the court. Senior players, Kelsey Engler and Apryl Covey both said that four words could sum up their favorite inside joke with their teammates, "You Suck-Just Quit!" The girls' confidence always stayed high, even if they did not win. Although not winning resulted in a quiet bus ride home, they still had their moments.

Senior Tasha Reid, or as her teammates called her, T-Unit, said, "We had a trail mix fight and Amy Karafinski got hit in the eye with a raisin." Referring to a more rowdy bus ride, Kelsey said, "Tasha and Cara made up a new version of I Got a Brand New Girlfriend. It was interesting." Some of their favorite memories happened off the court, however. Apryl said, "Senior night might have been the best night I had ever had, especially at the end of the game when at 5:15 we got to walk out on the court one last time together."

Over the years the girls made memories that never left them, and their full-hearted laughter echoed in the gym afterwards, in the place they had played for years.

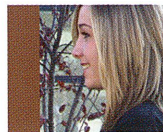

"Yes! I have talked to a lot of guys who want a boys' team."

Jaimi Hicks, 10

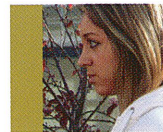

"Yes, KA boys are crazy at girls games, so the girls could get crazy at theirs."

Ciara Brown, 11

Among the Homecoming Harleys, seniors Sara Rattay, Stacey Shankle, and Megan Shotts await the arrival of the football players amidst the revved engines. "My dad looked forward to riding his bike on the field. He looked so sweet too," said Stacey. Stacey competed on the varsity competition cheer squad where she held the title of captain.

Squad Conquers Competition Scene

Story by:

Over the years, cheerleaders acquired a very stereotypical image, one that dictated their sole purpose as the encouragement for sports teams, namely the football players. However, this generalization did not have a basis in reality, for the world of cheerleading had evolved into one that included more than just football games. The cheerleading squad expanded its horizons to include competitions, as well as cheering for sporting events.

The cheer squad, led by senior captains Sara Rattay and Amanda Moser, traveled to the sporting events, while the competition squad, led by senior captain Stacey Shankle and freshman captain

Becca Laero, participated in competitive events. A junior on the squad, Bethany Gottshall, explained the major difference between the two squads. She said, "The main thing that separated the two was who we cheered for. For cheer squad, we were in front of screaming fans at the sporting events, and for competition squad, we cheered in front of a panel of judges who scored us and people from different schools."

Even though attending competitions broke away from the traditional cheerleading mold, the girls enjoyed competing and hoped to continue to expand the amount of events they attended.

In front of the marching band, the girls execute their Waterfall stunt. Senior Ashley Schwarz said, "My job in the stunt was to catch Sara." Ashley recalled a painful incident two years ago when Dakota Kanas came down in a twist and broke her nose.

In the opening football game versus Butler, senior Ashley Petrouski performs the Raise the Score cheer. "It seemed like every time we played at home, we had to perform in out of control precipitation," said Ash. She lived in Allegheny Township with two golden retrievers named Holly and Bailey.

Performing their Paper Doll stunt for the home crowd at Davis field, the girls use each other for balance. "I loved cheerleading. It was basically the best thing ever. I had so much fun because all of the girls on the squad were rad," said junior Natalie Faletti. Natalie typically stood on top of every pyramid.

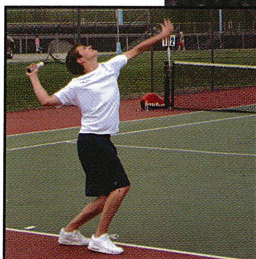

Aligned along the sideline at a home football game, senior cheerleaders get the crowd excited. Concerning cheering, senior Mandi Moser said, "Cheerleading was so much fun because we were right on the sideline in the action." Mandi enjoyed her Earth and Space class with Mr. Vergari.

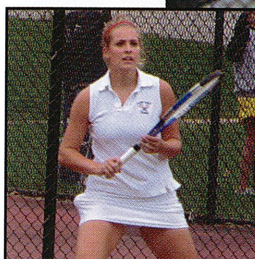

Senior Ashley Petrouski and juniors Tiffany Berry and Bethany Gottshall make a sign to show support for homecoming queen nominee, Mandi Moser. "While making the sign, we had to navigate through high school traffic to keep the surprise a secret," said Ashley. Senior Brad Lookabaugh accompanied Mandi throughout the evening.

At the baseline, senior Blair Woolheater serves for the point. On the season, Blair said, "Overall it was a good season. Even though we didn't end up in Hershey, many players gained experience that will help us in the future." When not perfecting his tennis game, Blair liked to ski and snowboard.

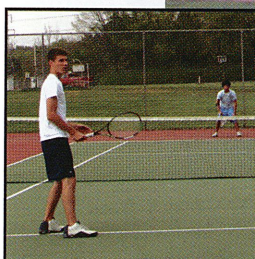

Intently watching where her opponent hits the ball, senior Melanie Worek shuffles on the baseline at Shaler. Regarding the team's motto, Mel said, "What other sport looked this cute?" When she found spare time, Mel enjoyed watching King of Queens, The O.C., and Grey's Anatomy.

Winding up to hit the ball, sophomore Cassi Fallecker gets ready to use her backhand stroke. "I thought that my backhand actually was one of my strengths in the game," said Cassi. At home, she liked to listen to punk music, especially that from the group, Punchline.

Ready at the service line, senior Brad Lookabaugh waits for his partner, senior Will Land, to serve in doubles. In regards to his tennis season, Brad said, "Tennis was always a fun season and we had a pretty decent year. I'll definitely miss making fun of Jim Wright." Brad planned to major in biomedical engineering and eventually either go to medical school or earn an MBA.

Coach Antenucci gives the girls warm-up instructions after a long bus ride to Shaler. On his team, Mr. A. said, "This year's team was about dedication. A group of senior girls who dedicated themselves for four years, worked hard and competed harder." Mr. A. coached the girls for 15 years.

At the section doubles tournament at Fox Chapel, senior Sarah Cappel watches her toss to serve. "The season was definitely unforgettable and the girls were amazing! We had a lot of fun at practices, bus rides, and matches," said Sarah. She hoped to live near the beach when she got older.

Perfectly going through his serving routine, senior Will Land reaches for the ball in his serve against his Burrell opponent. On his tennis career, Will said, "Tennis was great, but it was difficult adjusting to a different coach every year." Outside of school, Will loved to target shoot with his father, Mr. Ronald Land.

Members Serve Up Good Times

For the athletes on the boys' and girls' tennis teams, the 2006 season would always have a place in their hearts and minds. "We lost together and we won together," said junior Laura Beskitt, fondly recalling her experience on the team. Although the team had its fair share of glorious moments, such as the unexpected snow on senior night or the triumph of successful matches, plenty of embarrassing times arose as well. "I was eating one of the cookies Cappo made, chocolate chip to be exact, and I got chocolate all over my uniform. I was so embarrassed," said junior Alex Rudy. Dave Bieranoski said, "They were announcing the seniors on the other team. I said a somewhat bad word, resulting in Dr. Pipman making me sit on the bench by myself for the rest of introductions."

Not every memorable incident involved stained uniforms or angry teachers, however, and the teammates created lasting friendships during the season. Whether trusting that their doubles' partner did not hit them on the back of the head or experiencing the joys of victory together, one could safely assume that the memories of those days lived forever in the spirits of the tennis team players.

Season Starts at Stroke of Midnight

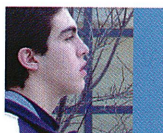

Story by:
Meghann Wygonik

The basketball team kicked off their 2006-2007 season in a quite unusual way. The coaches held a 'Midnight Madness' practice in order to get the team and fans pumped up for the season. Junior Kevin Toman said, "I thought it was a clever idea." Coach Bennis borrowed the idea from a few colleges to have their first practice of the season as soon as legally possible. The team practiced from midnight to roughly one thirty in the morning. The practice consisted of different shooting drills and a scrimmage. Senior Brad Lookabaugh said, "The team thought it was exciting since some of students and parents came out to watch. However, later that day when we had practice again, the entire team was really tired and we had a bad practice."

The team hoped to continue the tradition in years to come. Looking back on a memorable event during the season, Brad Lookabaugh said, "One time at a Saturday practice, we weren't making any of our foul shots at the end of practice and our coach got real angry and basically kicked us out of the gym. When we got to the locker room, we found a surprise pizza party."

How did the new coaching staff impact your season?

With a Connellsville defender behind him, senior Steve Yarussi drives the ball to the hoop. On the game, Steve said, "It was always great to beat Connellsville." Steve lived in Vandergrift, home of his favorite restaurant, G&G's.

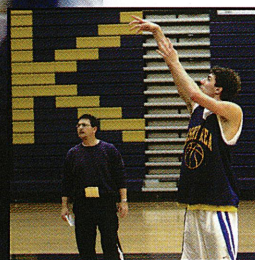

During the Connellsville game, sophomore Jeff Jackson attempts to deflect a pass while senior Brad Lookabaugh plays defense. On his hopes for the season, Jeff said, "I was excited for basketball this year and I hoped that we could pull out enough wins to make playoffs." Off the court, Jeff enjoyed watching Fresh Prince and listening to R&B music.

Ready to box out for the rebound, senior Brad Lookabaugh watches as sophomore Brady Pacific makes a lay-up. On his best played game, Brad said, "During a home game against Hempfield, I had eleven points in the fourth quarter to rally a comeback, but we lost at the buzzer." Brad enjoyed watching Law and Order: SVU.

Watching his opponent shoot a foul shot, junior James O'Quinn prepares for the chance to rebound a missed shot. James said, "Winners never quit and quitters never win; we never gave up this year." James helped with the school's future basketball program by coaching players in the Bittyball League.

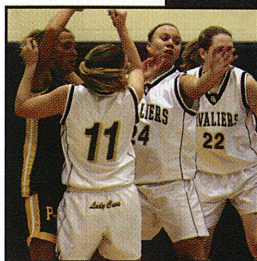

In perfect form, senior Brad Lookabaugh watches as his foul shot goes in at practice. "As far as practices went, we just ran...a lot...more than a lot," said Brad. In addition to playing basketball, he golfed, played tennis, sang in Chorale, and served Key Club.

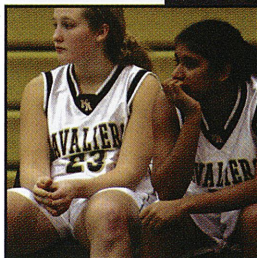

As she brings the ball down for offense, senior Tanisha Wheatley crosses the half court line as she tries to lose her Penn Trafford opponent. "My favorite memory was the lunch at Lindsey's where we ate a ton and got to watch her HUGE fish demolish and eat other fish," said Tish. She liked to eating out at the Olive Garden.

Trapping their Penn Trafford opponent, sophomore Lindsey Nies, junior Lauren Butler, and senior Tasha Reid attempt to block a pass during a home game. On a fun hoops experience, Lauren said, "On Saturdays during the season, we would all play hide and seek at the Mills." Lauren chose World Cultures as her favorite class to attend.

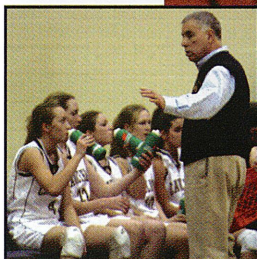

Intently focusing on the game, sophomore Kayla Weiser and junior Jenny Meighan watch the girls play on the court. When asked about her teammates, Jenny said, "The girls were funny, especially when we played hide and seek at the mall." Jenny lived in Avonmore with two brothers, one sister, and two dogs.

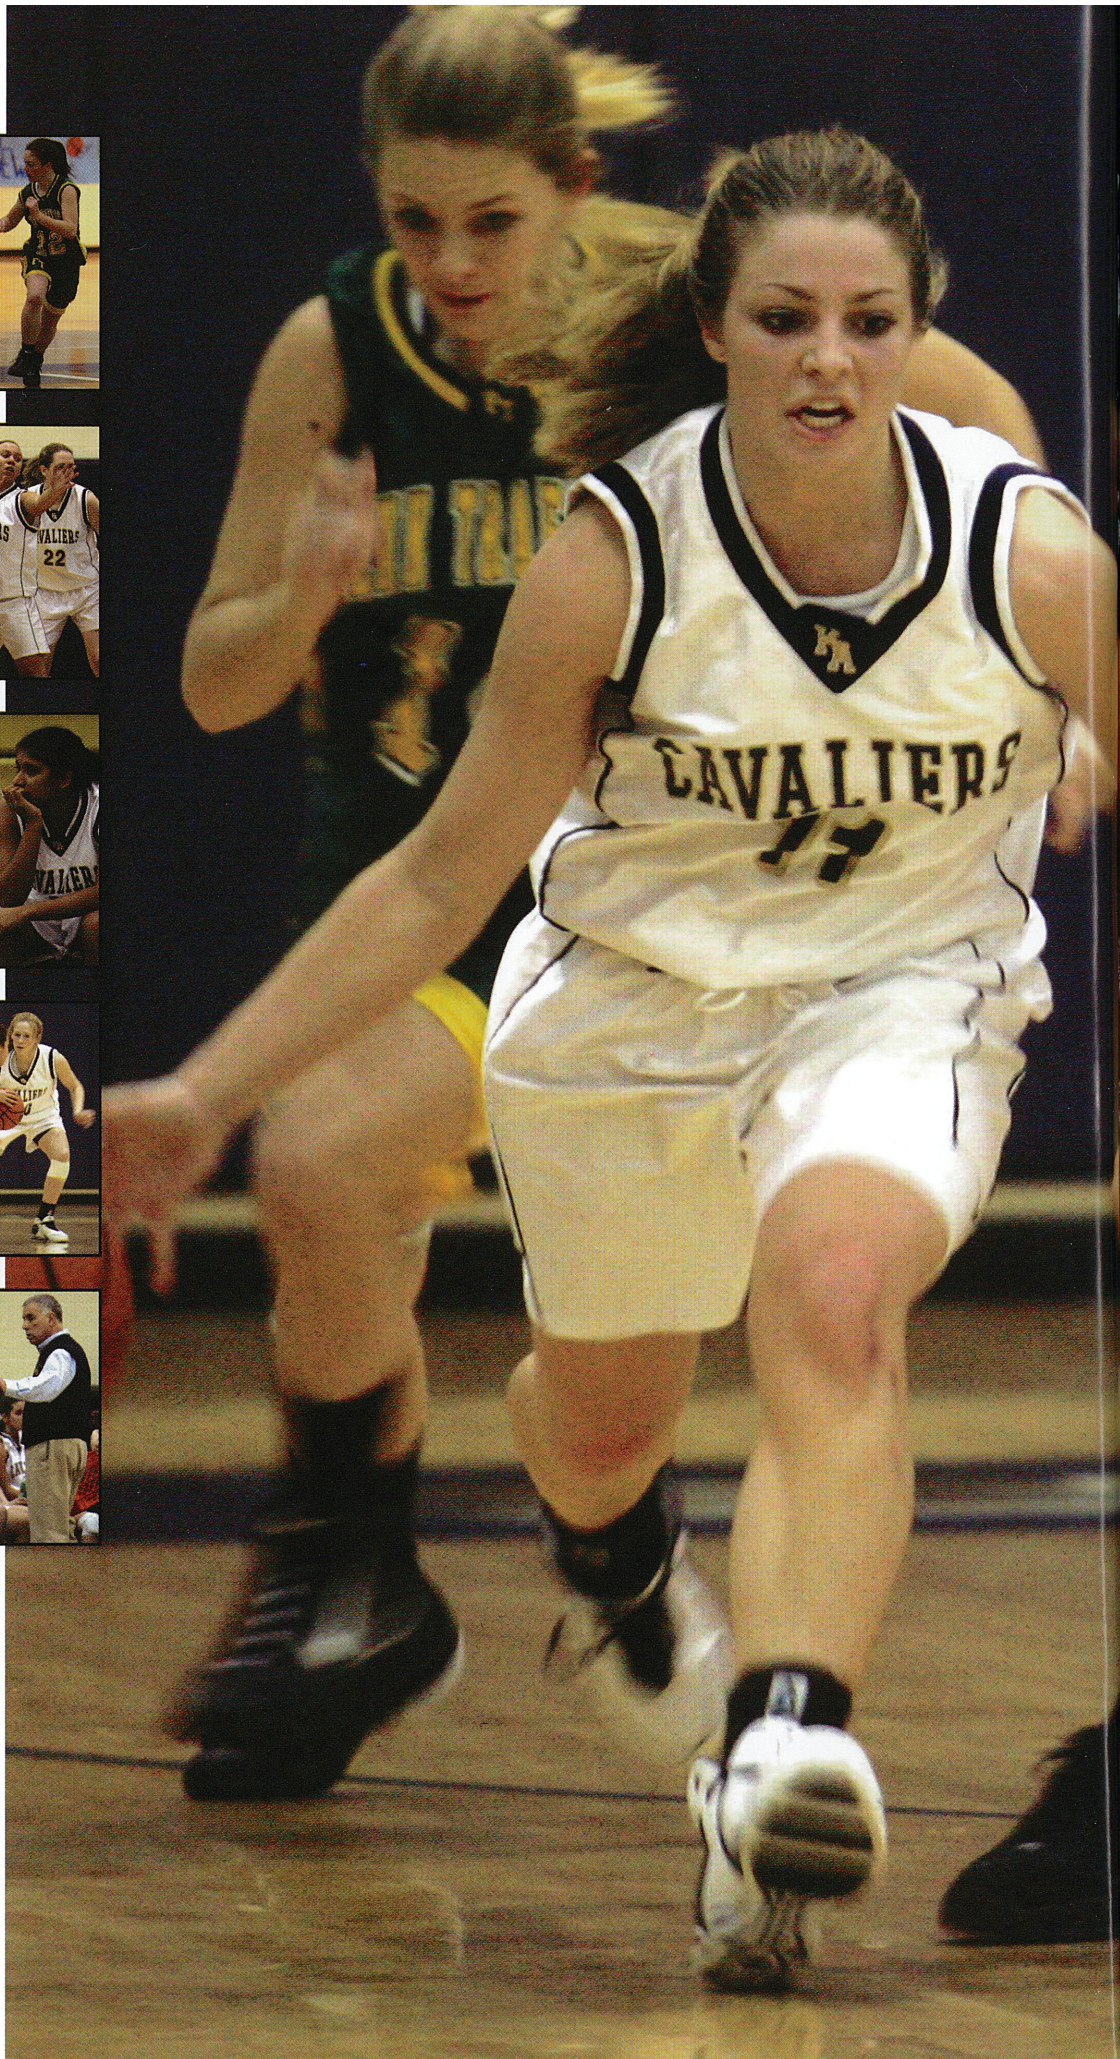

Carefully watching her opponent, freshman Chelsy Cosentino plays defense on a Penn Trafford guard. When asked about team unity, Chelsy said, "Our team was really close and we all helped each other out when someone needed help or was feeling down." Chelsy resided in Allegheny Township with one brother and one sister.

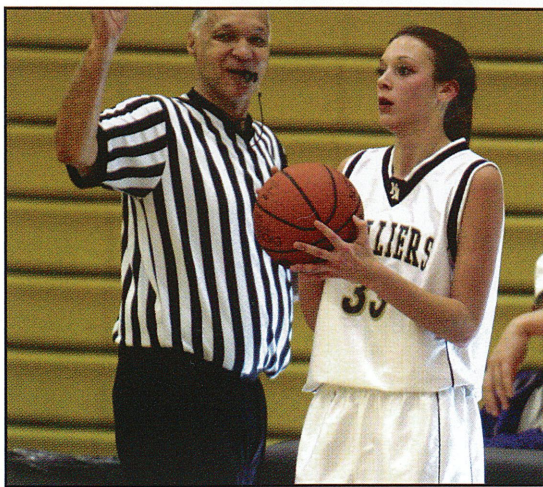

The girls' varsity basketball team intensely listens to their coach, Mr. Intrieri, as he offers helpful advice to help win their game. On her outlook on the sport, sophomore Steph Yocca said, "Leave it all on the court." When not playing basketball, Steph enjoyed drawing and listening to music.

Keeping away from her defenders, sophomore Lindsey Nies quickly dribbles the ball up the court during a Penn Trafford game. On her favorite aspects of the game, Lindsey said, "I loved the thrill of people cheering for me and making big plays." When not playing hoops for AAU or the school, Lindsey liked to eat at the Olive Garden.

With the intention of throwing the ball to the point guard, senior Sarah Cappel prepares to take the ball out of bounds. Regarding the season, Sarah said, "The upperclassmen chose little sisters, played hide and seek at the Mills, and all came to love CAUTION tape." Sarah served NHS, Key Club, and Cavalier Leadership Council.

Players Run/Jump Toward Success

The girls' basketball 2006-2007 season swiftly became ridden with victories. Every practice, the girls all enjoyed yet another glorious opportunity to run for the trainer, once again exciting new thrills as they ran seemingly endlessly together. "Running was definitely the best part of basketball. I wish we could have run every single day for twice as long," said an excited sophomore Dominique Pugliese. "The only thing that could even compare to the running was watching Tasha spending the season trying to dunk. It was truly breathtaking when she did over the summer," said sophomore Karly Thompson. "I mean, I know she had to drag a trampoline under the net to do it, but it was still pretty sweet!"

As it turned out, unfortunately, trampolines did not often show up under basketball nets as one may have believed. In fact, if someone scored in this way, it would never have counted, not even if their team or a completely outside source put it there. It also later became apparent that the air cushions in "Nike Shox" did not offer the same springing power of a trampoline when someone tried to jump with them. Nevertheless, Tasha, an energetic senior, still made every day both an adventure and a victory for the girls' basketball team, with laughter on the side.

After shaking hands with his Gateway opponent, senior Mike Spisak awaits the referee's whistle to indicate the start of the match. On his team's strength, Mike said, "We were like every other sport; we put in the long hours of practice and other hard work, except we didn't know how to lose." Mike enjoyed watching both Miami Ink and That 70's Show.

Wrestlers Sacrifice for Sport

Story by:
Sarah Kramer

While playing sports sometimes resulted in winning a medal and attaining hero status amongst peers at school, there entailed much more personal sacrifice than what greeted the spectators' eyes. For the members of the wrestling team, their sacrifice came in the way of dieting and weight loss. Whether trying to shed a few extra pounds or more, the wrestlers had to limit themselves in what they did and how much they ate.

Accomplishing such a feat, especially when having to eliminate some of their favorite foods, became a daunting task although not unsuccessful. "Once I lost about six pounds in a day," said senior

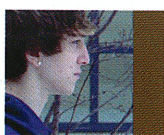

Jordan Moore. However, Jordan reiterated that more options to keep the wrestlers in shape and in regulation for their weight classes existed. He said, "Basically, eating right and exercising were important. Most people would have rather sat on the couch, eaten as much as they wanted, then have come to practice with three layers of clothes on, trying to lose weight. Nah, I'm just kidding, but seriously it was all about eating the right foods and exercising." Whatever means used to reach their goal, the wrestlers' individual sacrifices regarding weight loss ultimately led to the success of the team as a whole.

What did you think about the new PIAA weight regulations?

"I really did not have to worry about it myself because I was in a good weight class."

Corey Shellhammer, 11

"I thought the new rules made wrestlers lose weight in a more healthy way."

Tommy Magness, 11

"I didn't like it as my friend Jordan had to wait a long time to enter the P52 class."

Justin Delancey, 11

"It made it much harder on the wrestlers."

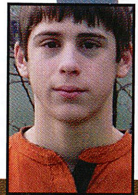

Joe Lehots, 10

At ease, seniors Jordan Moore and Ian Musco respectfully listen as the national anthem plays before their home match against Gateway. Regarding his favorite motivational quote, Jordan said, "As you think, you shall become." Jordan resided in Allegheny Township, but hoped to someday live in Malibu, California.

"Wrestling wasn't a sport that was fun. It took hard work and determination to be the best."

Coach Tursky passionately reacts to a referee's call in a match against Franklin Regional. "Having one of the best coaching staffs in the state and wrestlers who believed in me made it easy to succeed," said Mr. Tursky. Coach had one brother, one sister, and a dog named Tucker.

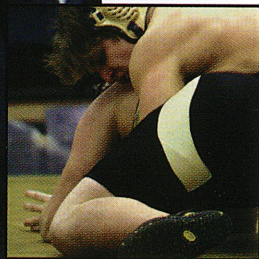

Ready for action, freshman Mike McCutcheon, senior Ian Musco, and junior Jesse Briscoe mentally prepare themselves for an important wrestling match. On his motto, Mike said, "Amateurs practiced until they got it right, but professionals practiced until they couldn't get it wrong." Mike resided in Allegheny Township with a boxer dog.

With his arm raised high in the air, senior Brandon Drobka gains another win to add to his record. Regarding his attitude on wrestling, Brandon said, "You got what you put in. That extra take-down in practice could have decided the outcome." Brandon had a personal victory against Penn Hills.

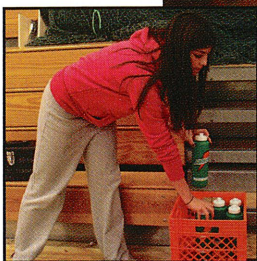

After taking down his opponent, junior Jeff Krajci applies pressure to his Gateway competitor's left knee. "We worked hard and played hard. That's what Kiski Wrestling did," said Jeff. Outside of school, Jeff enjoyed kickboxing and playing Guitar Hero.

Keeping his eye focused on his Norwin opponent, freshman Zach Shannon ponders his next move. On his thoughts about the sport, Zach said, "Wrestling was hard, but I still did it." Zach resided in Allegheny Township with one brother and two sisters.

Sophomore Jocelyn Tague prepares to distribute water bottles at a ninth grade basketball game. "It was fun to help out with the athletes, especially the ones in therapy because of the surgeries," said Jocelyn. Throughout the school year, she participated in SADD, Show Choir, and Ski Club.

To carefully disinfect tweezers, junior Teal Smail wipes them with rubbing alcohol after ATC Donna Rife pulled out stitches. On her most memorable training event, Teal said, "I trained at the section title game for girls' soccer. They won by scoring three goals in the last few minutes of the game." Teal enjoyed her World Cultures class with Mr. Christie.

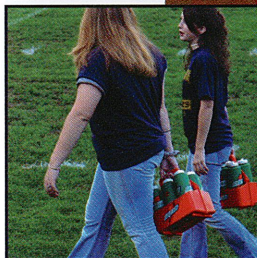

Instructing an exercise, senior Mel Worek helps seventh grade student Max Colechi in his physical therapy routine twice a week. "Max was always fun to work with, except when he fell asleep... then I'd just wake him up with water," said Mel. She served Key Club, NHS, CLC, and Student Council.

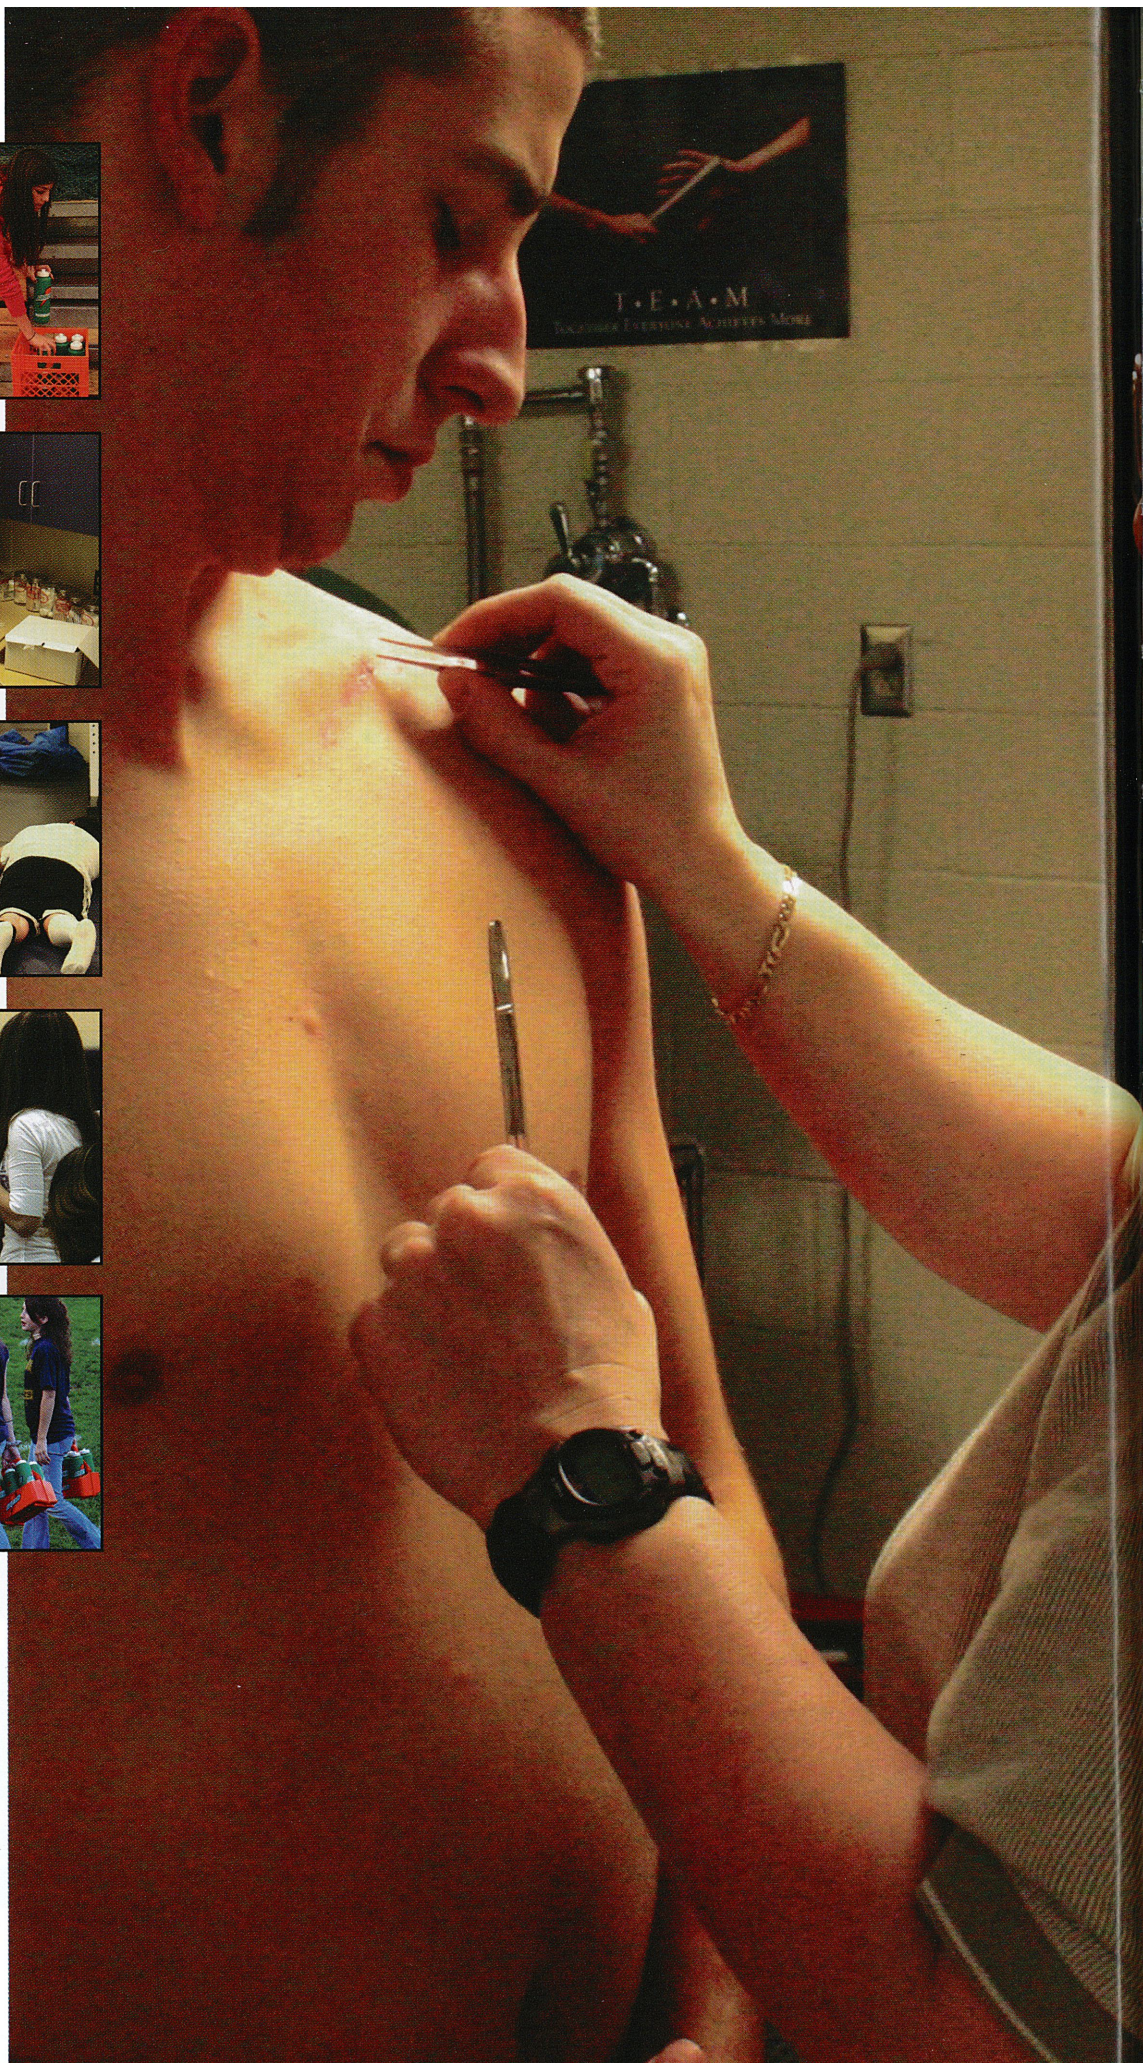

At a home wrestling match, trainer Donna Rife hands sophomore Sarah Kunkle a wipe to clean blood from the mat. On her thoughts about training, Sarah said, "Training with Donna was always an interesting experience." Sarah enjoyed going to her favorite class, French, with Madame Brady.

Ready to tend to the football team, senior Sarah Emerick and sophomore Sarah Kunkle carry water bottles out to the field. On her favorite part of training, Sarah Emerick said, "I enjoyed helping nurse the athletes back to health, especially Josh Lucas." After high school, Sarah Emerick planned to attend Shenandoah University and major in physical therapy.

Inquisitively looking on, senior Josh Lucas watches athletic trainer Donna Rife remove stitches from his shoulder. On her job, Donna said, "Being an athletic trainer at Kiski Area was a very rewarding experience and I could honestly say that I was a jack of all trades and master of none." Donna has served the athletic department for 18 years.

Ready for hydration, junior Brenna Feeney fills up the football players' water bottles. On the trainers' motto, Brenna said, "Training, it was what we did." When not on the field, Brenna enjoyed dining at her favorite restaurant, Chili's.

"The training room was a lot of fun with all of my injured friends."

Trainers Set Stage for Greatness

When it came time to get ready for the big game, some fans made T-shirts while others painted up. However, the most enduring fans showed up to the game two hours early in rain or shine to set up equipment and help out before cheering on the athletes. At football games, wrestling matches, and basketball games, these devoted individuals, the trainers, worked diligently behind the scenes to make sure the athletes could perform to their best. From filling water bottles and mixing Gatorade, to icing and taping injuries, they did it all. Trainers have learned to stand ready for anything and expect the unexpected at all times.

Senior Sam Stonebraker said she has filled "about one million give or take" cups of water this football season alone. Sam also said that one of her biggest responsibilities at the games included "watering the boys." Junior Justina Cerra said, "Kristina Hendrick and I trained together during away [basketball] games, and since we never brought cheerleaders with us, she and I would cheer." Even though their work has many times gone unseen, their efforts nonetheless shined through and reflected on the field and court.

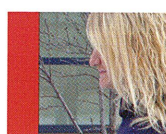

"I would have to say sprained ankles because they were fun to wrap."

Chelsea Markle, 10

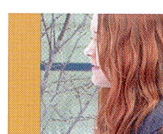

"Wrists...because they were easy to wrap."

Sarah Kunkle, 10

"The ankle...because it was really the only thing I knew how to do well."

Sara Shaffer, 11

Players Examine Sport Brutality

Story by:
Neal Henry

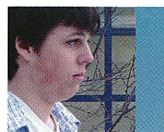

While every sport demanded physical strength and agility from its participants, those that skated the ice might just have had a bit more bruises and broken bones than most. After all, the soccer player fell onto the grassy earth, the football player fell onto cushioned turf, and the swimmer never fell at all. The hockey player, however, fell onto the rock hard ice. Senior Paul Schultz recalled a painful experience when he said, "I once had to have stitches on my chin. During a tournament at the Kirk S. Nevin Arena in Greensburg, I got severely checked. Two guys came at me at once, one from behind and one from the front."

Another player, senior Ross Burkett said, "At a varsity game at Center Ice last year, I hyper-extended my groin and I had to sit out for a couple of games." Yet different player, Dustin Schrecongost said, "Taking a hit against the boards a couple of years ago, I broke my arm. I also had a few concussions, but that was pretty common in the sport."

From a hard check into the boards to a nasty fall on the ice, members of the hockey team certainly experienced the pain and sacrifice it took to become great. Still, the bruises and broken bones did not hinder the team, a true reflection of their undying will to succeed.

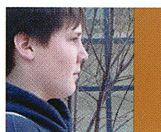

Have you always supported the Pens, or just after their recent success?

"I have always been a big Pens fan, even before their winning season."

Chris Nida, 10

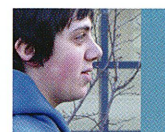

"Yes I have always been a fan."

Josh Asosa, 9

"Yes, I liked them, but I preferred when they were bad because tickets were cheaper."

Dustin Schrecongost, 11

"I have been a Pens fan even before Mario Lemieux retired."

Before the opening face-off, junior Mike Nepesa stretches his legs. On pregame warm-ups, Mike said, "Goalies had to be very flexible in order to make saves and to play the game." In his spare time, Mike enjoyed listening to country music and eating at Taco Bell.

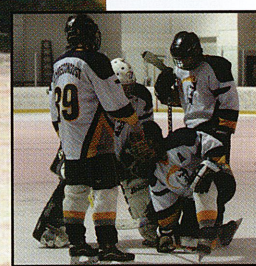

Pushing away his opponent, sophomore Jordan Zvonkovich tries to gain control of the puck. On his motivation for playing hockey, Jordan said, "I was greatly inspired to play hockey from my older brother Jeremy." Jordan enjoyed going to gym class with Mr. Spagnola.

After an offside call, senior Paul Schultz and freshman Kris Clark prepare to face off against Hempfield. Recalling a funny hockey experience, Paul said, "Last year, we put Zac Talmadge into his hockey bag and he jumped out when people walked past." Paul planned to work at his father's machine shop in the future.

Juniors Dustin Schrecongost, and Bill Segretti, and senior Josh Horvath offer advice to junior Mike Nepesa on how to make a save. On his favorite motivational saying, Dustin said, "Walking was easy when the road was flat." Dustin played hockey for over five years and lived in Allegheny Township with one sister named Danielle.

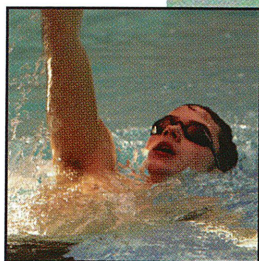

Senior Jim Gemza waits to retrieve the puck after freshman Tony Williams makes the hit against Hempfield. "When Andrew Maloney broke a sink at Johnstown's War Memorial a couple years ago was my best memory," said Jim. He planned to further his education after graduation.

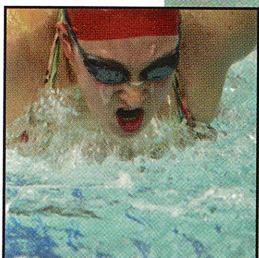

At center, senior Josh Horvath checks forward Nathan Colligan from Hempfield into the boards. "Giving your all for 45 minutes required a lot of conditioning off the ice," said Josh. He further said that Hempfield represented one of the strongest opponents in Western PA.

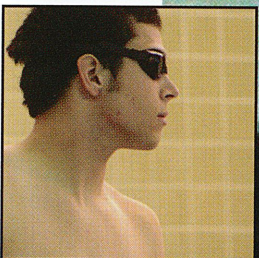

Junior Matt Wilson perfects his backstroke during a practice. On his most enjoyable stroke to swim, Matt said, "I liked butterfly because it involved a lot of power and I felt like I was flying." He enjoyed watching The Simpsons and listening to Jo's Rock 'N' Roll.

Fiercely swimming at practice, senior Kim Klingensmith works on her strokes. On her favorite aspect of swimming, Kim said, "I always enjoyed walking up to Subway before swim meets." Kim planned to become a dental hygienist or orthodontist and to eventually reside in Georgia.

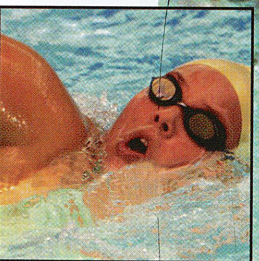

Ready to jump into the pool, senior Austin Jackson prepares himself for the water before a swim practice. On the team's motto, Austin said, "Push it to the limit." When not in the pool, Austin worked at Arby's.

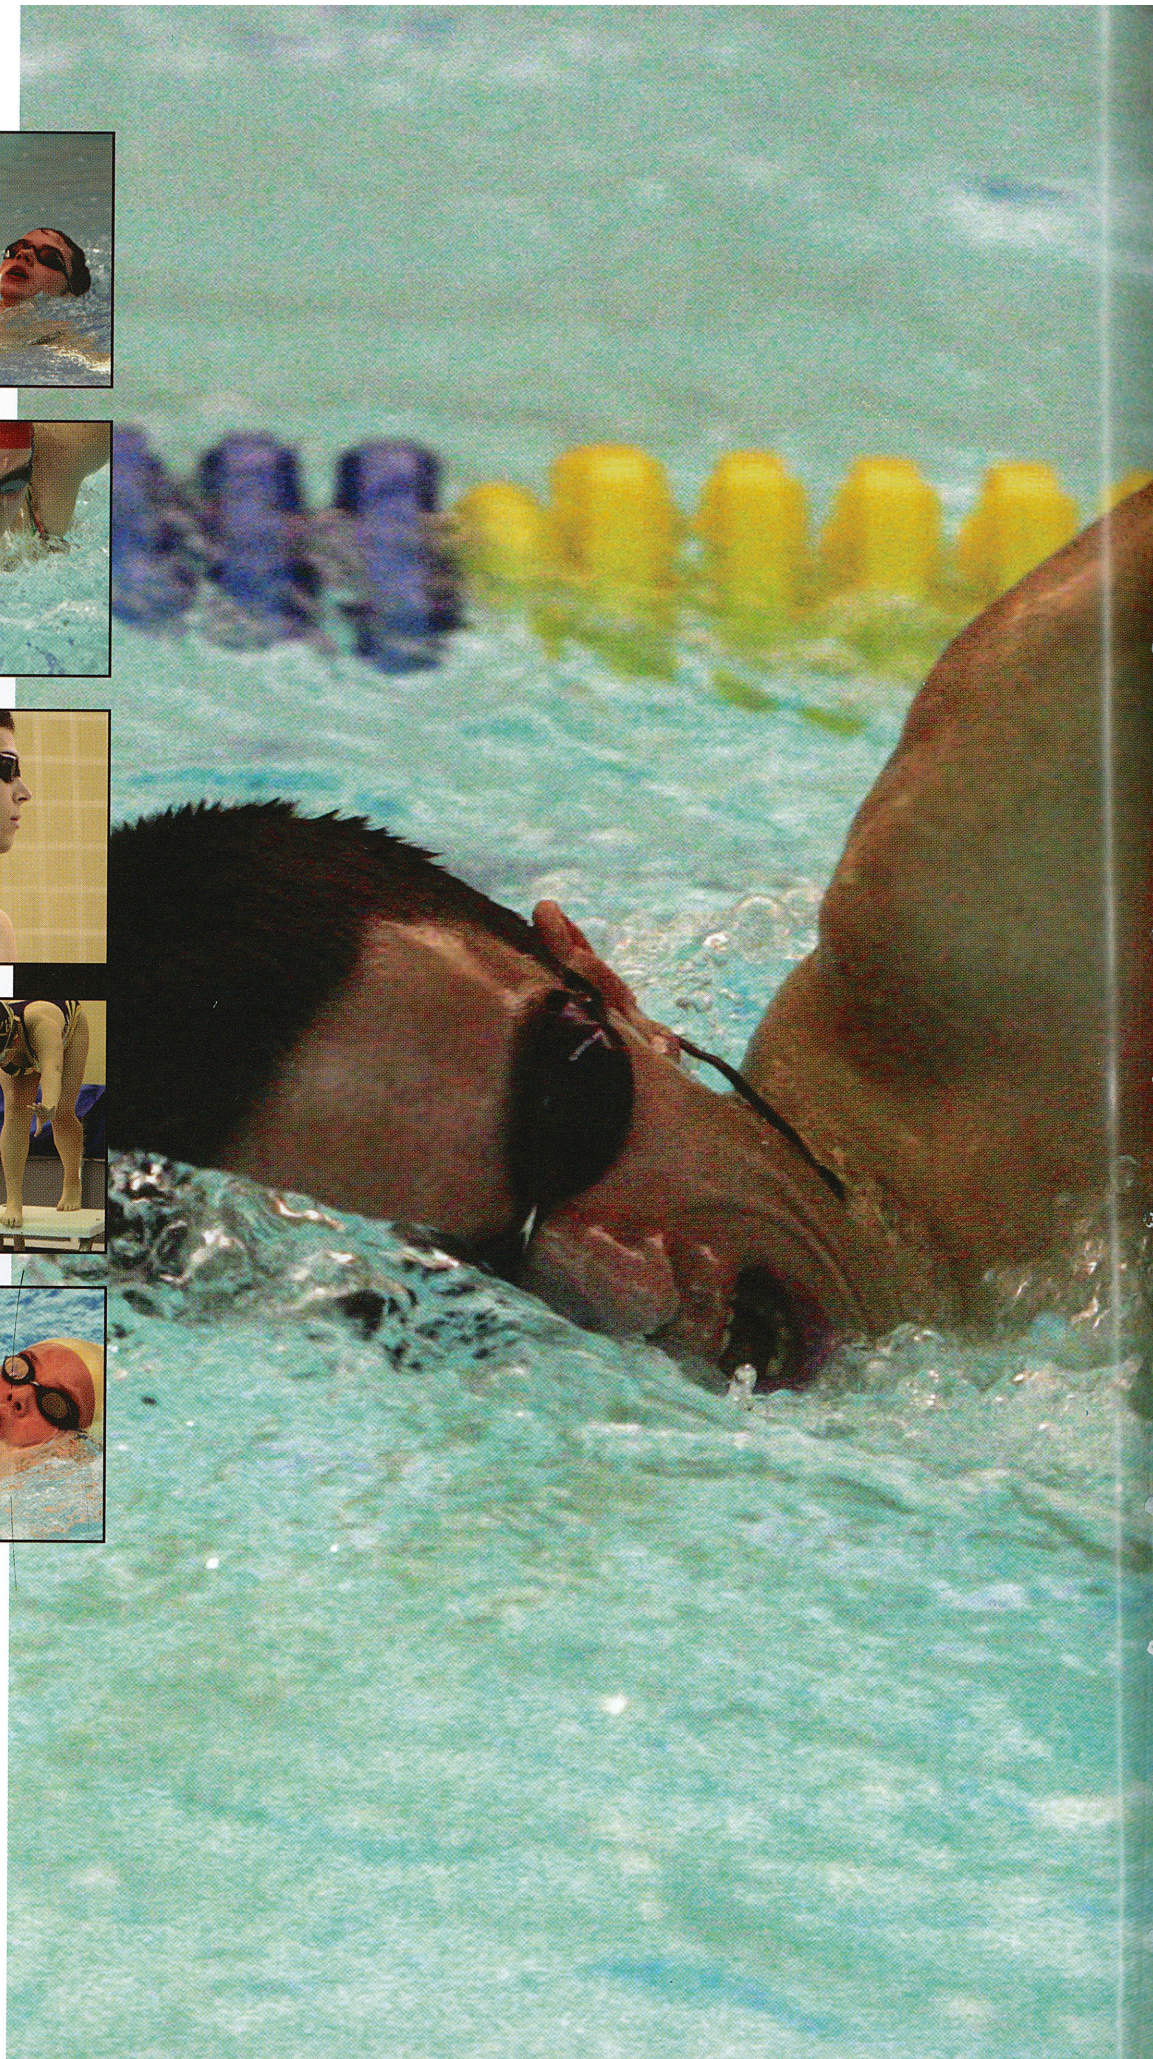

Ready for action, sophomore Adrienne Vita prepares to dive off of the block for her relay meet. On her thoughts about swimming, Adrienne said, "I really enjoyed it. Mr. Scott really helped me with all of my strokes and I felt as though I have improved greatly from the beginning of the season." Adrienne served both Red Ribbon Committee and SADD.

In mid-breath, sophomore Aimee Gawne swims freestyle at a practice. "My best meet was when coach put me into the 200 freestyle at the last minute and I did better than I thought I would," said Aimee. She recognized Mrs. Poleski as her favorite teacher and lived in Bell Township with a dog named Coco.

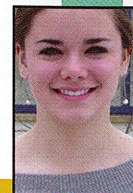

Gliding through the water, sophomore Paul Crooks swims freestyle. "Grrr," said Paul when asked about swimming. Of all his school classes, he most enjoyed History with Mr. Tarosky.

"My most difficult dive this year was the back one and a half pike."

Dessie Mitcheson, 10

In mid-air, sophomore Dessie Mitcheson executes her back straight somi. When asked about diving team antics, Dessie said, "Before each meet, we would say, 'Smack That!'" Besides the diving team, Dessie played on the golf team and served Cavalier Leadership Council.

Rough Regiment Renders Respect

Swimmers devoted many precious hours to their aquatic sport. Their regular workouts, though strenuous, benefited the team greatly in their pursuit of excellence and victory. Practices took place every weekday for two and a half hours "and regrettably Saturdays," said senior swimmer Mike Klaric. He recalled swimming 5000 yards (about 2.8 miles) in a typical practice. Aside from endurance workouts, the swimmers lifted weights to get into top shape. Recalling his most memorable practice, Mike said, "One time we jumped out of the pool, ran outside in the snow, and jumped back in the pool five minutes later." Practices, of course, did not consist of all work and no play. "Four words: slip and slide showers," said junior diver Brittany Brasiola.

In addition to the school team's season, some swimmers continued to train and compete in the Cavalier Swim Club, also known as CSC. This group practiced in the evenings and had meets almost every weekend. Considering the average distance swam per practice reached as high as 3.5 miles, practices exhausted the swimmers. "Our coach would push us so hard that I usually had to be assisted out of the pool by the end of practice," said junior Shauna Miller. Despite the insane amount of work, the swimmers enjoyed themselves and thus reveled in the euphoria of victory.

Runners, on your mark, set, BANG! The elite runners of the track team flew from their starting blocks, and the sound of pounding feet on the track only raised the excitement throughout the crowd, the team members, and the runners themselves. At approximately the same time, other members of the team hopped, skipped, and jumped their way to victories. Not only the runners and jumpers caused a stir during the track season. The throwers exhibited their immense strength by sending objects such as shot puts, discuses, and javelins soaring through the frigid spring air. Undoubtedly, each day of practice included aspects vital to the track team's success.

However, the athletes could not seem to deny the guilty pleasures that the track season encompassed. Christian Hartford said, "One of the most entertaining parts of practice was when Sean Baker, Josh Vick and I would go gopher hunting with our spears."

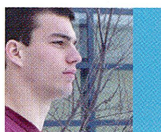

No matter what ridiculous activities that transpired during the track season, they always proved beneficial for the team, whether by improving their skills, lightening the mood, or providing some team bonding time. This perfect mixture of fun, games, and competition led the track and field team to another victorious season.

In an attempt to catch up to her opponent, junior Julia Rozewicz hurdles in the 100m race. "I loved running hurdles. They were so addicting," Julia said. She resided in Washington Township with one younger brother.

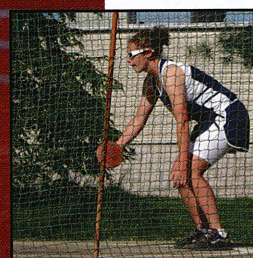

To gain maximum distance, junior Nate Robinson begins his spinning rotation to hurl the discus. On performing in events, he said, "I loved competing. It was a lot of fun." Nate lived in Markle where he rode quads and hung out with friends at the mall.

Senior Tanisha Wheatley hands off the baton to senior Michelle Erb in the 4x8 relay. When asked about her advice motive to try her best, Michelle said, "You only got one shot." During school, Michelle worked as an office worker and participated in Cross Country and Winter Track.

To finish strongly, senior Danielle Pityk completes the last phase of the triple jump, the extension. When having to choose between long jump or triple jump, Dani said, "I liked the triple jump because it was weirder, more difficult, and cooler." Dani hoped to major in kinesiology at Penn State main and then move to Colorado to settle down.

Ready for her first throw, senior Leah Ulizio mentally prepares to break her own record. On competing at states, Leah said, "States was amazing. Standing on the podium was a moment I'll never forget." Leah placed third in Pennsylvania with a javelin throw of 139'11".

Advancing to the next base, senior Sara Kanas keeps her eye on the ball's position. "The team's chemistry helped us during our undefeated season and we knew that it was going to be our year," said Sara. In her spare time, Sara enjoyed snowboarding, running, and hanging out with friends.

In the infield, sophomore Kayla Weiser and graduate April Pollick play in a defensive position. On her thoughts about softball, Kayla said, "The team had a good season and it was a great experience to make it to the playoffs." Kayla lived in Vandergrift with one brother.

With a quick lead off from second base, senior Tasha Reid pays close attention to the play in front of her. When asked about her position, Tasha said, "I played right field which was quite contrary to my favorite player, Jennie Fitch, who was a pitcher." Tasha had aspirations to build the biggest roller coaster in the world after moving to California.

Patiently standing, junior Tiffany Brucker waits for the play to start. On words to her opponents, Tiffany said, "Hit it at me and see what happens!" Tiffany appreciated playing golf, hanging out with friends and listening to music.

Eagerly anxious to rack up another strike out, graduate Elise Moore whips the ball in toward the strike zone. "Elise always played from her heart and lifted the team," said Coach Haney about Elise's efforts. Elise went to Thiel College to become a math teacher.

Mentally preparing for a big game, senior Kristi Marsili thinks about ways to keep her composure when she feels pressured. Regarding the team motto, Kristi said, "Our team motto was 'Make it Count' because it was the last year playing with the graduated seniors and we played together since our T-Ball years... Looking back at our 15-0 season I would say we made it count." Kristi enjoyed watching football games on Sunday afternoons and eating Ramen Noodles.

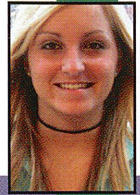

On the run, junior Tiffany Brucker attempts to get to the next base. Offering her advice on the game, Tiff said, "Push yourself and never give up." When not on the softball diamond, Tiffany liked to dine at the Olive Garden with the team.

Team Pitches Their Quirky Superstitions

Everyone knows to never let a black cat cross your path or dare to open an umbrella inside, but what superstitions came with softball? The Lady Cavaliers believed in a few superstitions of their own and practiced pre-game traditions for good luck. Before the games the girls would never mess with the baselines. If they did, they would encounter bad luck for the rest of their softball career...or maybe just for the game. Tasha Reid even developed her own personal good luck ritual. In between innings, when coming in from the outfield, she always touched first base. Tasha said, "I always stepped on first base so I could hit good."

Other members of the team also had their own little habits they did throughout the game to keep spirits high. Every time the girls would get an out, Kristi Marsilli and Sara Kanas did a dance. Superstitions kept the game fun and showed the girls' passion for the game. Although they wore gloves throughout the game, they could still probably find some extra room in there to cross their fingers...just in case.

Team Funds New Field

Story by:
Meghann Wygonik

Someone famous once said, "It only takes a spark to get a fire going," and for the KA Baseball program, that spark occurred when Mr. Jankowski became head coach. When asked about his new plans for the team, Mr. Jankowski said, "I decided to attempt and build the baseball program into one of the finest in the WPIAL. Our practice facilities and playing field were inferior when compared to the teams we were competing against. I felt we needed to make the changes to generate pride within the program and also improve the quality of our practices."

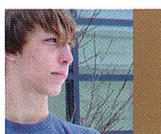

The baseball program raised over twenty thousand dollars in order to fund improvements that included a new batting cage, bullpen, backstop, flagpole, fencing, and even a concession stand. The new batting cage and bullpen would intensify the practices while the newly finished field would bring a sense of pride to players. Junior Shawn Vogel said, "I hoped that the new field will bring more fans to the games. Hopefully the fans will inspire the team to do better." The future of the baseball program changed for the better.

How will the new field and backstop improve your game?

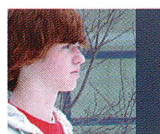

"Since the backstop was deeper, I hoped to steal home more often."

Jim Genza, 12

"It made my game look that much more fresh."

Jon Moore, 12

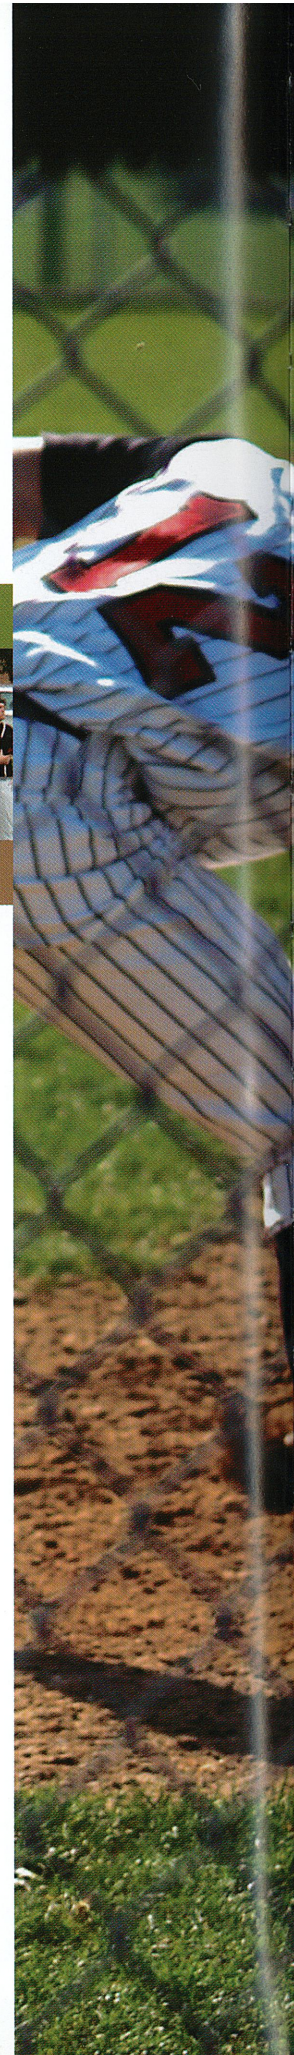

"I'll be able to focus more on the game rather than playing on the old field."

After a diving catch, junior Kory Kirchartz throws the ball back to the pitcher. Regarding his position, Kory said, "It was my first year at third base so it was a learning experience. Baseball was so much fun." Taught by Madame Brady, Kory claimed French as his favorite class.

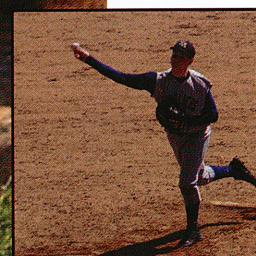

In mid-windup, junior Tyler Beitel goes through his routine before pitching the ball. "The main point about pitching was keeping your composure after good or bad things happened," said Tyler. Other than playing baseball, Tyler passed the time by golfing and hunting.

As he steals third base, senior Blake Pavlik awkwardly slides in safely. On his uniform cleanliness, Blake said, "It was washed pretty often." Carlo did an amazing job. Blake planned to further his baseball career in college while majoring in business.

On the mound, senior Eric Gadola prepares to receive the signs from the catcher in order to throw his pitch. On his favorite position, Eric said, "Pitcher because I could control the whole tempo and outcome of the game." During school, Eric served Key Club, Math League, Chorale, and Showchoir.

Junior John Russell throws his first pitch of the Quaker Valley game. When asked about the team's slogan, John said, "To give anything less than your best is to sacrifice the gift." In the future, John hoped to live in Florida because of its great baseball weather.

Lessons earned

To Coaches/Faculty Advisers:

Aside from the obvious skills involved in the sport, how has participating provided life-long lessons for team members?

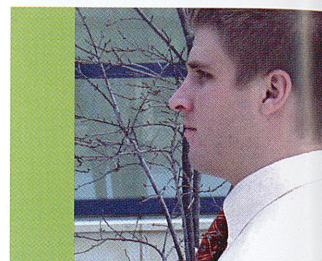

"Golf is a life-long sport. It teaches us patience... you can't rush a good shot. It teaches us to be humble...the best golfers have a bad day once in awhile. It teaches us to be confident...you can shoot the best round of your life at any time and strive to continue shooting for a lower score. Yes, golf is a life-long sport!"

Mrs. Gibson/Golf

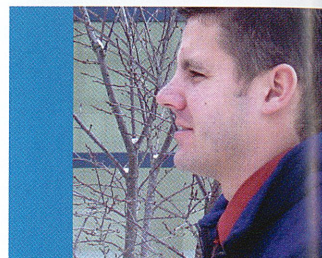

"Basketball prepares students for life by teaching the values of commitment, hard work, and teamwork. Players commit many hours after school to participate. Likewise, a strong work ethic is demanded of each player. Finally, teamwork or learning to work effectively with others is a skill that translates to every day life."

Mr. Smedecor/Basketball

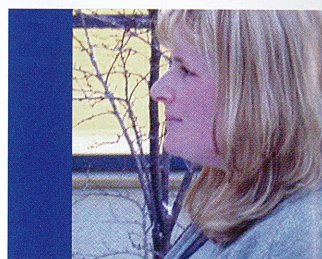

"Baseball teaches kids about teamwork. When a player is asked to lay down a bunt, he sacrifices his own opportunity for the good of the team. There are many sacrifices students and players will have to make in the real world."

Mr. Swartzlander/Baseball

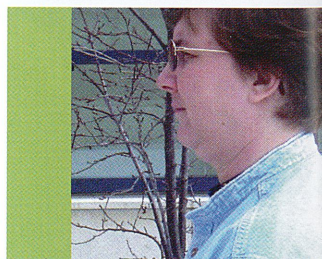

"Teamwork is required for any team to be successful. Each player must be willing to not think of themselves, but what will be best for the team. The dynamics of teamwork learned in youth sports provide the basis for being part of successful teams in adult life."

Mrs. Kubenic/Soccer

"By participating in student training, I feel that the students learn a great deal of responsibility and compassion. They learn how to stay calm in pressure situations, as well as gain social skills and the ability to interact with professionals. Overall, student training helps to build character."

Ms. Rife/Trainers

"The sport of cheerleading teaches athletes to be responsible, hard working, and caring individuals. Activities such as conditioning, practicing, competing, and helping the community all take hundreds of hours. Maintaining this commitment for two seasons is also a challenge."

Team sports teaches cooperation and tolerance. Teammates learn to cope with adversity and success on an individual and group basis. Through practice, players become aware of their own strengths and weaknesses and understand the role of self-discipline, self-respect, and responsibility to others.

Mrs. Haney/Softball

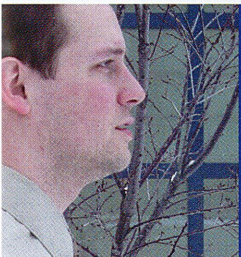

Student athletes participating in Cross Country must be self-motivated. In the sport, you always know when "you quit" on yourself and gave less than your best effort. Learning to push yourself in practice or in a race is a great life lesson.

Mr. Argyros/Cross Country

Running is life... The rest is just details. Life is not always easy, and neither is running. You have to work hard everyday. You have to do all of the necessary little things. Seize every moment and look at it as an opportunity to be the very best person that you can be.

Mrs. Schaeffer/Cross Country

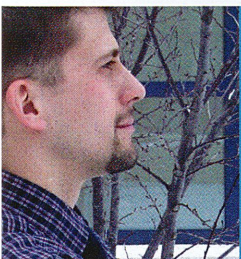

Seldom in life is one's success or failure determined by strictly individual achievement. Athletics prepares students for their future by developing teamwork skills which will be vital for future endeavors. Skills such as communication and attention to detail make the difference in basketball, just like they do in life.

Mr. Smith/Girls' Basketball

The volleyball team overcame a lot of adversity over the past few years. They had four different head coaches over the past three years. The girls came together as a team. They showed resilience, dedication, and spirit. There were many life lessons learned on and off the court, the greatest of which was self-confidence.

Mr. Toland/Volleyball

I believe that there are more valuable life lessons acquired from playing a team sport than any other activity in high school. Communication skills, teamwork, responsibility, work ethic, learning how to deal with failure, and being competitive are all just a few areas that improve in a young man's life as a result of sports.

Mr. Jankowski/Baseball

cross/roads

Students approached cross/roads in their lives. Then, each chose a path. Some trod a straight and narrow way, others took a circuitous route. They used their time and talents in hopes that they could make a difference. They headed in directions that entertained and challenged each other. They began their journey with friends. Along the way they befriended others. At wide spots in the road many of them gathered. Dedication to their cause became their commonality. As the path underfoot rose, they labored a little harder, but the view from the top never disappointed. They looked back with new points of reference and they saw those cross/roads from which they embarked. Their diverse paths led them to the times of their lives.

KDKA Anchor Bob Pompeani publicly congratulates Extra Effort Award winner senior Leah Ulizio on her accomplishments in sports, academics, and extra activities. An enthusiastic Leah said, "It was quite a rush!" After graduation, Leah planned to attend the University of Pittsburgh with a scholarship for throwing javelin.

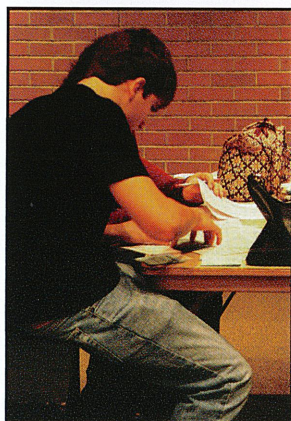

"Participating in extra-curricular activities makes you very well-rounded and it allows you to get involved with people and groups who can make a difference in your community."

Bob Pompeani, KDKA Anchor

In the middle of the Friday night action at Davis Field, senior Lauren Emanuel focuses in on the cheering squad to capture a great shot. "This was a really tough year to get money shots because the weather was always awful," said Lauren. She hoped to one day have a dark room in her house to develop her own pictures.

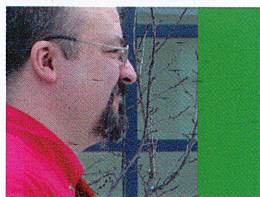

In the front of the auditorium during the club pictures shoot, reporting editors senior Jenna Tallarom and sophomore Jordan Talmadge do their best to write blue passes for students to offer a quick sports quote. Jordan said, "The worst part of sending out passes was when the students did not come down and we had to send them all over again." Accompanying Jenna and Jordan, senior Melanie Worek and junior Neal Henry did their best to get as many students in the book as possible.

What goodies did you look forward to in the YBR food cabinet?

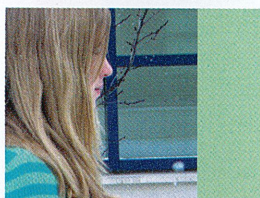

"To my own demise, I pretty much ate anything that the editors brought."

Mr. Fantaski, Adv.

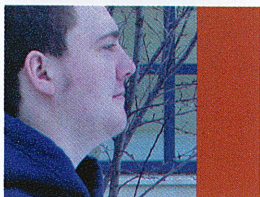

"I would rather have something to drink than some of this stuff the editors brought in."

Susan Kessler, 10

"I always did enjoy Meg's Keebler Cookies."

Neal Henry, 11

Seated at the piano on the auditorium stage, best instrumentalist senior Joe Scheller entertains the editorial staff with his jazz keyboarding talents. On his favorite aspect of yearbook, Joe said, "I enjoyed Mr. Fantaski's music selection in the drawer." Joe hoped to attend Youngstown State University and major in music after graduation.

Ready to finish the 2007 Campus book, adviser Mr. Fantaski prepares some parent ads. "It became more and more difficult to decide upon a theme that would better the book from the previous year," said Mr. Fantaski. Aside from yearbook functions, Mr. F. has announced the Kiski Marching Band for 16 years.

"I had the chance to work with a fantastic group of people and we created an amazing product."

Release Honey from the Hive

What Exactly
Made Grid/Work
Work?

The challenge of constructing a yearbook to stand proudly beside its magnificent predecessors faced a daring group at the beginning of the school year. The yearbook staff and editors laid each section Piece by Piece, and Out of the Shadows emerged a gleaming Grid/Work that filled everyone with pride who had a part in its fabrication. The analogy of a bustling hive of bees corresponded completely to the activity that surrounded the yearbook.

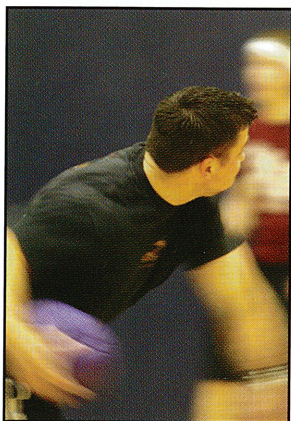

The field bees, understaffers, brought in their nectar and after refining by the worker bees, editors, the sweet honey of a completed yearbook emerged to become enjoyed by all. The entrance to the hive, or yearbook room, became somewhat of a revolving door at deadline times, with each editor buzzing in and out, taking photographs, editing stories, counting money, or tallying surveys. Each aspect of the book fit together seamlessly. The eclectic editorial group hoisted high their grand Grid/Work for all to marvel and share.

On the Monday after students voted for their favorites, seniors Megan Kiebler, Lauren Emanuel, and Jenna Fannin, along with junior Kelly Dunlay, announce the winners for the 2007 Senior Specials. "It was difficult trying to be literate. I had Meg whisper everything in my ear," said Jenna about announcing on GMK. The senior class voted Jenna the senior with the nicest eyes in the graduating class.

With great aim, Mr. Swartzlander wails a ball at his next victim. Mr. S. said, "The students usually performed very well against the faculty. Student/Faculty events were a lot of fun for all who participated." A Kiski graduate himself, Mr. Swartzlander played football, basketball, and baseball while in high school.

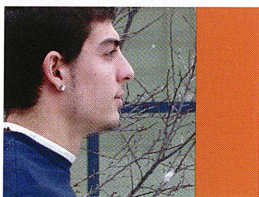

Picking his next target, science teacher Mr. Guzzie throws the ball at the students' side in the dodgeball game sponsored by Mock Trial. On the game, Mr. Guzzie said, "I was on the hunt." Outside of school, Mr. Guzzie enjoyed hunting, fishing, and golfing.

What teacher did you fear most in the many faculty versus students games?

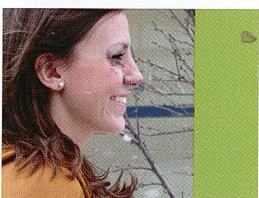

"Definitely not Mr. Swartzlander because he had a pansy arm."

Don Mignogna, 12

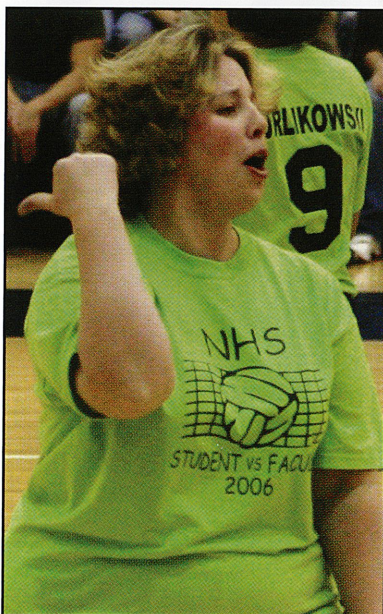

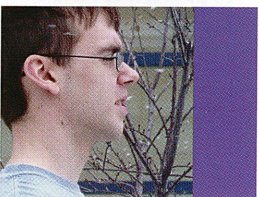

"None of the teachers really scared me, except for Mrs. Haney in Key Club functions."

Kaitlin Kimble, 12

"Mr. Spagnola because he was so huge."

Brad Anthony, 12

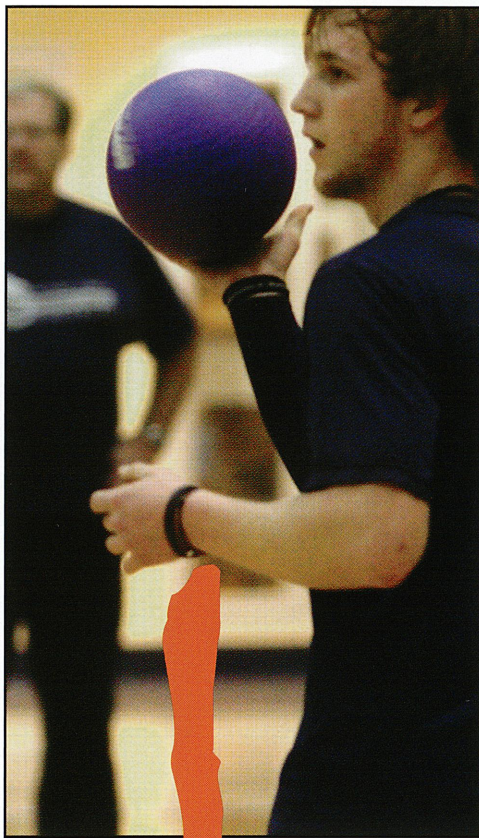

On the court in the NHS Volleyball Game, English teacher Mrs. Flick boldly reacts to the last point in which the teachers won. When asked about the game, Mrs. Flick said, "Woaaaa... The game was intense, but we kicked butt!" Outside of the classroom, Mrs. Flick enjoyed shopping, reading, and playing with her kids.

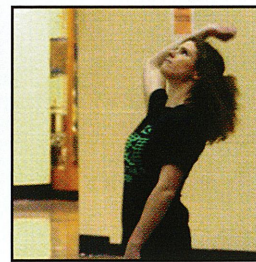

Rocking back and forth, the junior girls call out their chant, "Juniors, you know!" before the much anticipated Powder Puff game. On her saying during the game, junior Amy Antal said, "Blood-type, A-positive!" Amy enjoyed watching her favorite movie, Mrs. Doubtfire and listening to rap music.

Positioned as center, junior Bettina Vaccarello snaps the ball to junior Tiffany Brucker in the Powder Puff Game sponsored by Student Council. Regarding the juniors' plays, Bettina said, "Our coaches gave us crazy plays like 'Boot right- screen left- stag- rosebud- reverse.'" Well-travelled, Bettina vacationed in Italy, Germany, and Austria.

With his eye on his next victim, senior Jake Shaffer spins the ball in his hand in the Mock Trial Dodgeball Game. Regarding the game, Jake said, "It was a blast. A lot of teachers were talking smack, but we showed them who was better." Jake recognized Earth and Space with Mr. Vergari as his favorite class.

Ready to serve the ball, senior Danielle Pityk prepares to crush the faculty competition. "It was great to beat the teachers, especially after Mr. Swartzlander did his best to divert my attention," said Dani. She further said that she only wished that Mr. Pityk would have played so that she could have pegged him in his "big bony head."

Preparing for the Mock Trial Dodgeball Game, senior Jesse Randall centers his mind and body. On the game, Jesse said, "Well, I was not sure if you could really call it a game... It was more of a slaughterfest. Afterwards, I noticed that my teachers seemed a lot friendlier." Jesse enjoyed AP Physics class with Mr. Desantis because it helped to prepare him for his plans at the University of Pittsburgh where he intended to study physics engineering.

et the Games Begin

When the siren sounded to signal the beginning of activity period, the ultimate battle arose: the students versus the faculty. After all, no event in the gym became more intense than students versus faculty or upperclassmen versus underclassmen. For the first time in many years, Student Council sponsored a Powder Puff football game. The gym transformed into a civil war battlefield with the senior girls charging the junior girls at full force. Even though the juniors claimed their victory, senior player Jackie Salvaterra said, "The juniors may have one this battle, but the seniors will no doubt win the war." The ladies proved their strength with the football game; however, the student troops seem stronger when allied together against the faculty.

Mock Trial sponsored a dodgeball game and National Honors Society sponsored their annual volleyball game. The elite force of the teachers came together and gave the youngins' a run for their money. The dodgeball game offered no shortage of ammo and only a few brave souls dared to travel to no man's land at mid-court. The students dominated the battlefield in both games, but many credited General Guzzie with some atomic spikes and claimed he lead the faculty to what would have otherwise become two shameful defeats.

Sopranos from Chorale, sophomores Charlene Munko and Kayla Robinson, and seniors Rebecca Szarmach, Autumn Armagost, and Sayward Beighley sing Song of Mary at the annual Christmas concert. Veteran Autumn Armagost said, "I remember being a bit overchoired at the time with Chorale, Concert Choir, KAndescence, Jazz Rock, and Cavalier Choir." Aside from singing in school, Autumn also enjoyed performing with the Armstrong Community Theater.

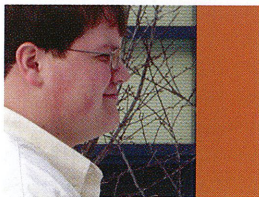

With flailing hands, junior Melena Robertson and senior Keith Hampshire practice their KAndescence show choir routines. Melena said, "Show choir was an awesome experience and the performances were a lot of fun." Melena resided in Washington Township with her sister Amanda, three dogs named Buda, Skwirt, and Hershey, and a horse named Prints.

Favorite Song to Sing or Play?

"Soul Intro/The Chicken...because it was written by one of the most influential bass players ever."

Dave Traugh, 12

"Lips of an Angel...because it was a really good song."

Jessica Medved, 9

"Sabre Dance...because it was a fun tune to dance along with."

Nick Marsili, 9

As members of Jazz Rock walk through the halls during the last couple of periods on December 23, juniors Meg Mszyco and Casey Zell, along with senior Brad Lookabaugh sing Christmas carols for all to hear. "Jazz Rock was a pretty great class. It was comforting to know I was going to spend 40 minutes a day singing the songs of Billy Joel and Eric Clapton," said an enthusiastic Brad. A tradition started by retiree and choral director Mrs. Rupert, members of Jazz Rock once again prepared all students for the holiday in sweet song.

At the Casino Theatre in Vandergrift, senior Danielle Pugliese portrays Mary in their Hometown Christmas program held on December 1-3, 2006. "With both Mrs. Hampshire and Mrs. Rupert, I learned to put my whole self into everything I did. This scene in particular brought tears to me every night," said Danielle. Danielle hoped to become a teacher and eventually live in Northern California.

"Of all the groups I participated in, I liked performing in show choir best because we got to dance while we sang."

Annie Manganaro, 12

To prepare for a Winterguard practice, sophomores Abby Pollick and Sarah Davis pull out the floor. "I thought Winterguard was more difficult than Colorguard because I had to spin sabre in Winterguard and only rifles in Colorguard," said Abby. At home or in the car, Abby liked listening to her favorite radio station, 100.7, and watching her favorite television show, Survivor.

Choral director Mrs. Hampshire welcomes the community to the Christmas concert held on Wednesday, December 13. On her commitment to the program, her son Keith said, "She put in a lot of hard work to make sure that her first Christmas concert at the high school was a success. She practiced a lot with us to prepare us for the event." Keith also played football and had a bunny named Thumper.

Talented Show Choirs Embrace New Names While Jazz Ensemble Embraces Honors

The 2006-2007 school year brought with it a newly revamped choral department. These changes, the work of the new chorus teacher and head of the music department, Mrs. Hampshire, revealed themselves most clearly in the show choirs. Starting with the first rehearsal, Mrs. Hampshire made all the alterations clear. The first day of show choir camp, she announced that members of both show choirs would vote on new names. "I could actually spell this year's name," said the academically inclined senior Autumn Armagost of the mixed show choir KAndescence. "I thought it was a great idea. The old names really did carry a lot of stigma and it really made a big distinction," said sophomore Lynall Llewellyn of the all girls CenterStage on the subject of new names. "I think it was more equal than it had been before, and that made it more fun," Lynall said about the new attitude inherent in the show choirs.

Jazz Band A also had a wonderful year, reaping the rewards of the previous season's spectacular performance. "Getting to go to Hershey for the music conference was great! The band was awesome and we got to go because last year's season was so good," said sophomore Cecilia Tregelles about the season. It always remained a fact of life that all of the school's performance groups revealed more than a little talent in the school.

Performing their fourth drill set, the low brass forms the middle seven of the jackpot slot feature. Quoting her anxieties about performing in front of thousands of people at regionals, baritone player, freshman Alyssa Vermeulen said, "I was very nervous whenever I first got out there, but it was also very exciting." Alyssa decided to play baritone because she wanted to become a part of something and share the experience with her friends.

With a steady hand, sophomore Grace Evans paints sophomore Harley Shaulis' face at the show choir's booth at the Avonmore Community Days. "I concentrated hard on trying to make the paintings look nice to make up for my lack of artistic ability," said Grace. At school, Grace enjoyed attending Chemistry with Miss Krautbauer.

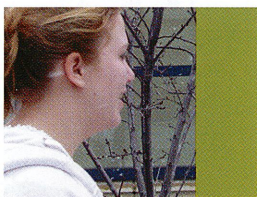

Eager to get back into the action, Mr. McClarnon grabs a quick breather to refuel in the Students vs. Faculty Dodgeball game. "I believed that the administrative staff should interact as much as possible with the students, no matter how weak their throwing arms were," said Principal McClarnon. Mr. M. joined the Kiski staff at the beginning of the year after leaving Deer Lakes High School.

Worst Fund Raiser Ever?

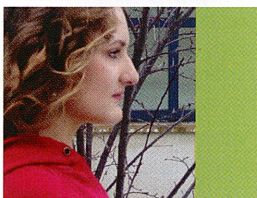

"For Key Club...The fruit sale because so many kids sold fruit and it wasn't cheap."

Sarah Davis, 10

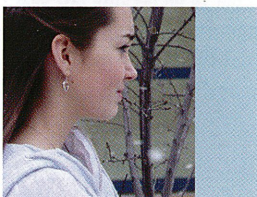

"For Chorus...I hated selling flags because nobody wanted to buy them."

Charlene Munke, 10

"For Guard...You'll have to ask my mom and dad that question."

Katrina Ritter, 9

Keeping beat for his band Streetlights on Standby, sophomore Ken Beck plays drums at the SADD Coffeehouse. On the SADD function, Ken said, "Playing at the coffeehouse was great! There were tons of people, great energy, and it was a good feeling knowing that we helped raise money." Ken resided in Washington Township where he enjoyed watching Fresh Prince of Bel-Air.

In their home show, the marching band formulates a money symbol. On raising money, freshman Abby Scanga said, "We did a bunch of fundraisers for band. Marching band was so fun, but very costly. Fundraising helped take the cost down by a lot." Abby chose the Thanksgiving pie sale as her favorite way to raise money for marching band.

"Since my mom was in charge of lottery tickets for the band, the whole house was riddled with yellow ticket stubs."

Nick Bieranoski, 12

In front of a captive audience, seniors Luke McDermott and Bill Walter rock the socks of those who attended the SADD Coffeehouse in the lower cafeteria on December 22, 2006. "It was really fun. Everyone sang along and had a really good time," said Bill. Monies raised at the coffee house went toward the SADD dance held in Gym B on January 6, 2007.

Together at work, seniors Summer Tickle and Meredith Manofsky tally the day's earnings in the Student Store. On working in the store, Summer said, "It was so much fun. The people were great and we always had fun." The Student Store sold snacks, Kiski apparel, and school supplies.

Members Devise Creative Ways to Raise Money

ne Italian Sub with onions & one without

Although they contributed to raking in a lot of money for the cause, stereotypical fundraisers such as hoagie sales left people wanting variety. The sellers, as well, craved fundraisers that they could enjoy without the anticipation of people slamming doors in their faces because they had seen the product fifty times previously that day. Fortunately, some brainstorming led to some more creative ideas, specifically amongst those involved in show choir.

They performed at the Fort Hand Festival at Kunkle Park, setting up a booth for face painting and a Chinese auction. However, one of the most memorable fundraisers for the students remained the "walking taco" booth that they manned at the festival in Avonmore. "The 'walking tacos' concept definitely made up the most unique fundraising endeavor of the year. For those who don't know, the aforementioned tacos consisted of a single-serving bag of Fritos stuffed full of taco meat and subsequent toppings. I won't lie; they were pretty awesome," said senior Danielle Pugliese. Certainly, from show choir to marching band, and from SADD to Telethon Committee, students had to search for more inventive ways to raise money for their causes. Senior Melanie Worek said, "Anything beat those same old hoagies that everyone in the county seemed to push."

On GMK, senior Lyle Clark and junior Meg Mszyco plead their peers to donate money to the Class Challenge for the Telethon. On the Challenge, Lyle said, "The battle of the classes was so close this year that every morning we had a member from each class go on GMK to fight for every penny." The sophomore class won with a total of over $800.

Stationed at the marching band's Car Show, senior Kyle Audo tunes his 1970 Plymouth GTX that won a trophy. On the band's fundraiser, Kyle said, "It was a blast and was for a good cause." Kyle enjoyed eating at China Lobster.

On air, sophomore Emily Rowan and junior Josh Barszczewski broadcast an episode of Good Morning Kiski during Christmas and Birthday Theme Week. On his thoughts about GMK, Josh said, "It was an unbiased, fair, and accurate report of the latest breaking news at Kiski. GMK, News your way!" When not hosting the news, Josh enjoyed reading, watching movies, eating, and napping.

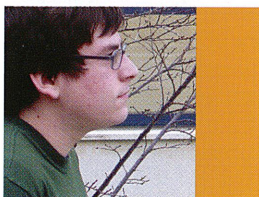

Just prior to the last dress rehearsal, director Mrs. Jacobs oversees her cast as they prepare with make-up for The Prince and the Pauper. Concerning the headdress, she said, "Aren't I pretty?" Mrs. Jacobs also sponsored NHS, GMK, and Drama Club.

Do you see any form of acting/producing in your future?

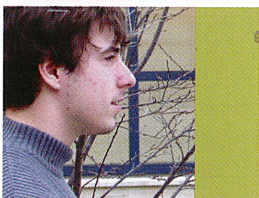

"No, I was really not into acting. I just joined Mock Trial on a friend's request and it sounded fun."

Anthony May, 11

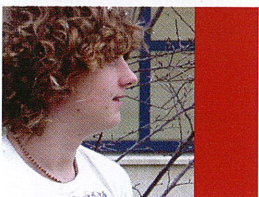

"I enjoyed being a TV anchor. However, I do not see myself pursuing a career in the movie industry."

Brad Arick, 12

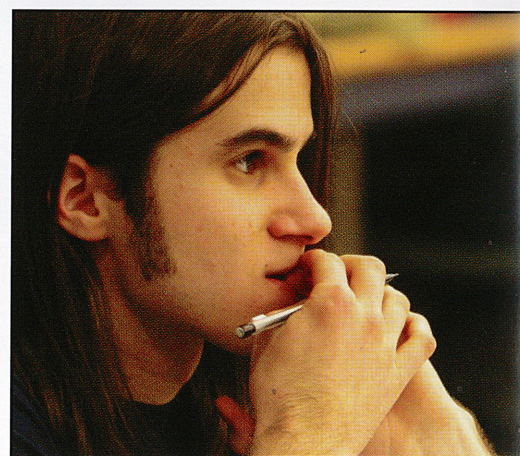

"No, I joined drama club because my sister was in it in high school and enjoyed it so much."

Don Gamble, 9

In pensive thought, senior Torie Glasser prepares to take the stand as the defendant at a Mock Trial practice. Jokingly, Torie said, "I always tried to think of ways to slaughter Greensburg Salem team members." She most enjoyed attending Mr. Jewart's AB Art III class.

Intensely listening to critiques of his examinations of witnesses, junior Zach Stickel unknowingly bites his fingernail at a Mock Trial practice. "Mock Trial was a very close team, and we worked hard to be the best. Don't worry, $1.02 was not needed for this comment," said Zach. He resided in Allegheny Township where he enjoyed watching his favorite show, Metacocalypse.

Performance and Acting

"Acting on the stage as someone else helped a young person learn about themselves as well as others. Often when we put ourselves in others shoes, we learned about new emotions and experiences we would have never thought possible."

Mrs. Musselman, English

Assertively pointing, senior Steve Artman motions for the anchors to begin Good Morning Kiski. On GMK, Steve said, "All hail the Minister of Propaganda." Steve planned to study Electrical Engineering at Penn State after graduation.

While hiding, senior Autumn Armagost and junior Maria Bruno watch as their brother, the Pauper, leaves the stage. "Drama club has brought me so far. I used to be relatively shy and self conscious, but now I can say that isn't true. I have become more outgoing as well as more adaptable to various roles through the things I have learned from my directors," said Autumn. In the future, she planned to attend Clarion University and pursue a double major in Social Studies Education and Musical Theatre.

Drawn in by the thrill, the most unique individuals joined the clubs where they could hone their acting and drama skills. Obviously, the most dramatic gathered on stage for Drama Club. This artistic and talented group used their acting skill and stage savvy to put on children's plays and to compete in the Pittsburgh Public Theater Shakespeare Festival held annually, where students prepared Shakespearean monologues or soliloquies to recite before a panel of judges.

Students transformed into news anchors for the announcement broadcast, Good Morning Kiski. To the best of their abilities, bright and early every morning, anchors put on a cheerful disposition to deliver the daily announcements. "It was all about being yourself and having fun with it," said anchor Zac Steele.

Finally, students could lose their identities on the Mock Trial team. This team acted out either a civil or criminal court case, playing the roles of attorneys or witnesses. Just as the members became immersed in their roles in the court room, they worked and molded together to create an unstoppable team. "We took the lawyers' sexy, took the witnesses' back, put them together, and we brought sexy back," said Kerry Decker regarding an inside joke about how close the team grew.

Helping the Mock Trial team with their case, lawyer Mrs. Amanda Fayer gives advice. On the team, senior Jesse Randall said, "This year was difficult because we only had one student lawyer returning from last year. We came a long way because everyone helped each other out." The team practiced twice a week after school and during the weekends at members' houses.

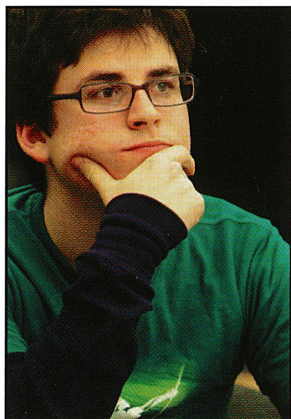

With a tight grip, sophomore Zack Henley grapples junior Brett Badac in the fall drama, The Prince and the Pauper. When asked how Zack liked the drama, he said, "The drama this year was very exciting and a lot of fun to do." Zack resided in Allegheny Township with his three brothers, his cat named Cuddles, and a fish named Spazubble.

Seniors Ashleigh Miller, Brittany Coulter, and Jenna Fannin prep for a toss that appears at the end of the rifle section in the Winterguard show. On performing, Ashleigh said, "It has been a very fun and exciting experience that I will miss very much." Ashleigh lived in Washington Township and worked at Garda's Restaurant.

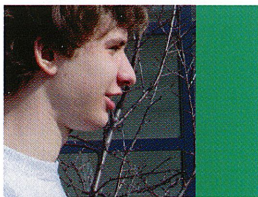

Intently focused at a Mock Trial practice in the library, junior Anthony May receives advice from lawyer, Mrs. Amada Fayer. On his thoughts about Mock Trial, Anthony said, "Mr. Kerry Decker brought sexy back." In addition to Mock Trial, Anthony participated in both Key Club, and NHS.

Which School Did You Love to Hate in Competition?

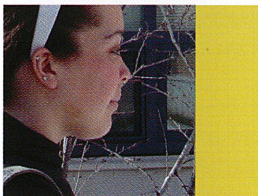

"FBLA...Hempfield because they had a lot of nerds."

Chuck Moyes, 11

"Winterguard... Gateway because they were never in sync but scored well."

Krysta Geary, 11

"FBLA...I really didn't have a team to hate. We just did our best."

Anna Gongaware, 9

In Mrs. Jacobs' Honors English Class, junior Madisyn Moore defends Mark Twain as the accused's lawyer. "The trial was interesting, but also very challenging," said the enthusiastic junior. Madisyn hoped to one day become a teacher and live somewhere by the ocean.

Sophomore Katrina Ritter focuses on stretching her legs so that she can easily do a split in the Winterguard program. Assuredly, Katrina said, "The hardest part of our program was the end feature." In school, Katrina most enjoyed Spanish class with Mrs. George.

Competition Based Clubs

"Competing in FLBA helped me to type faster."

Mike Fraser, 9

The members of AQT compete during a competition at Mt. Lebanon. On why she chose to participate in the club, sophomore Emily Rowley said, "Quiz Team was a great way to compete using brain power and the will to conquer other schools' smart kids." She enjoyed watching Veronica Mars and listening to the Red Jump Suit Apparatus.

Winterguard members freshmen Jen Morgan and Katie Roberto, and sophomore Abby Pollick stretch to get ready for a practice at Washington Elementary School. Jen said, "Stretching was a critical part of our practices to keep us from getting any injuries." Jen lived in Washington Township and liked watching Ace of Cakes and listening to most any type of music.

After a long, silent, tense couple of seconds, the judge announced that your team won the competition. Your teammates roared with delight, clapped hands and screamed in the name of victory. Certainly nothing could compare to the euphoria induced after a winning battle over a rival school. However, this exciting moment of pure ecstasy primarily reflected the arduous months of extreme study, practice, and preparation. "Winning shows that all of our work was worthwhile," said junior Quiz Team member Madisyn Moore when asked if such commitment paid off.

Kiski's major competition based clubs: Math Club, Envirothon, Future Business Leaders of America, Winterguard and Quiz Team all had their own moments of joyous triumph this past year. Before each prizewinning accomplishment, however, the participants had to do some serious work, including memorizing massive packets of information, learning skills such as testing soil levels, and even taking time away from homework to prepare. "Envirothon became a top priority in the weeks leading up to the competition," said junior Laura Beskitt.

If the team did not win, they only worked more diligently for the next competition. After all, regardless of the team, each member wanted to go home with the trophy, making all of the effort worthwhile.

In an attempt to find loopholes in the rules for Brain Drain team competitions, senior Steve Mszyco and junior Zach Stickel compare notes. On their accomplishments, Steve said, "We set a world record in Twisted." In his future, Steve hoped to build a career in Experimental Mathematical Theology and Analysis.

Anxiously awaiting the next question, junior Pat Dalsass competes at an Academic Quiz Team meet at Mt. Pleasant. "I pretty much just sat at my team's table doing nothing while Alex Nigra answered every question," said Pat. At home in Washington Township, Pat enjoyed running, playing guitar, listening to music, and hanging out with friends.

Editors of the Year

Story by Mr. Fantaski

Each year, I have to evaluate my staffs to assess both strengths and weaknesses for the next book. Coming into the 2006-2007 school year, I felt that our biggest strength lied in the reporting staff. For that reason, we added 32 pages to the book and implemented the unique placement of the page numbers, called the folio.

Additionally, readers should notice that the captions found in this book truly represent some of the best found in the state of Pennsylvania. Each caption consists of at least three lines, one of which offers a quote from somebody in the photograph, with the exception of the small square photographs found in the Student Life section of the book. With over 800 personal quotes from students, this yearbook truly represents, in my opinion, the best student coverage publication that the district has ever received. For those reasons and many others, I chose Miss Jenna Tallarom and Miss Melanie Worek as senior Editors of the Year.

Jenna Tallarom

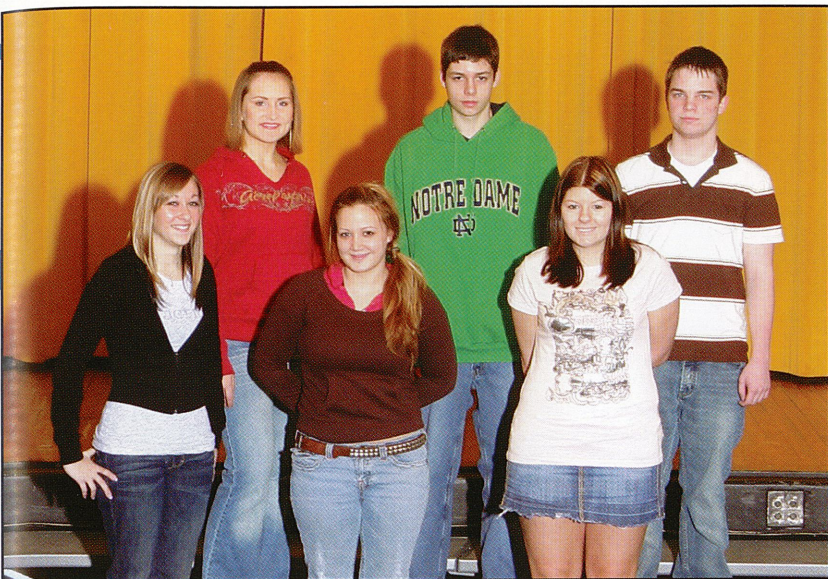

The first student in Kiski history to serve as yearbook editor for three years of her high school experience, Jenna has truly made an unprecedented impact on the Campus book. Over three years, Jenna has gathered personal quotes from over a thousand individuals, she has polled twice as many, and she has truly become a master at writing great captions. Beyond yearbook functions, Jenna has proved herself as an incredible humanitarian. Serving as president of both SADD and Red Ribbon Committee, Miss Tallarom has unselfishly and consciously prioritized the well-being of her classmates over herself so many times. For those reasons and so many others, thank you Jenna for your talents. Congratulations...my first editor of the year.

Melanie Worek

On Jenna's recommendation, I chose Melanie to join the editorial staff last year. Since then, I have come to realize a person with possibly one of the biggest hearts that I have ever known. In my 12 years of advising or co-advising yearbooks, Miss Worek truly understood the purpose of yearbook creation more than any other editor...to get as many students into the book as possible. Quite honestly, Mel truly went well beyond my expectations to include the opinions and quotes of all types of students. She did this not because I demanded it, but because her character, good-heartedness, and soul commanded it. Hence, while your peers made the unfortunate mistake by not recognizing your efforts in early October, I applaud you here. Thank you so much for your incredible heart and devotion to your class.

grid/work

good/will

Students lived in a community of many generous people who engaged them with their numerous charitable labors. From doctors to steel mill workers, the entire community supported the students and the students in turn gave back to them. The tremendous presence and encouragement of the community made them work diligently, so that one day they could build a community of their own that could measure up to it. The students appreciated their good/will and realized the value of their benevolence. Grateful for their interest, the community gave the world a special identity.

"I gave back to my community by making chocolate candy over the holidays and having luncheons for the elderly at my church."

Maggie Land, 11

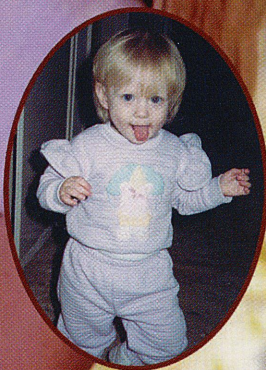

In his backyard in Allegheny Township, senior Chris Dunlay flies through the winter air after hitting his homemade jump. "Sled riding brought all of the local community kids together for a good time in the dead of winter," said Chris. When not sled riding, Chris spent many winter evenings on the stage practicing for his lead in the spring musical.

Aly,

We have watched you grow and have grown with you. From a beautiful, innocent infant into a strong, capable young woman, you have continued to fill us with pride and happiness. You remain a focused, determined daughter who has touched the lives of many. We will always be proud of you. Remember wherever you go, go with all your heart. We love you.

Love
Mom, Dad, and
Jonny

Christopher,

It's been a joy watching you grow from a little blond boy who just couldn't stop himself from hurrying to be first in kindergarten, to the young man who's so fast in soccer and track his teammates say it's like he has wings on his feet. It's been fun not just to watch you go, but also to watch the way you conduct yourself with kindness and style.

On your path to success, always stay true to what you know is right and don't believe anyone who tells you that something is not possible. Remember wherever you are that you have a great big family that loves and supports you, not to mention some guardian angels that we know are nearby as well.

We love you and are so proud of you!

Mom, Dad, Amanda,
Mickey and the Pets

Look back and celebrate all the ways you've grown, changed, and blessed the lives of those around you.

Look forward to the many exciting times ahead - times just waiting for you to live them in your own unique way with beauty, laughter, and grace.

You are a beautiful gift, filling us with pride and love.

Love,
Your Family

Tim-

We remember the day you came and told us you had a great science project idea when you were six.

You promptly used a large magnet to remove the color from the TV set.

It is our hope that your life will continue to provide opportunities to be creative!

Love, Dad, Mom and Mara

Lauren,

From our beautiful baby girl, tiny little dancer and flipping gymnast to our beautiful Winter Guard Captain. You have been a joy to watch as you grew more graceful each passing year. You are the sweetest daughter anyone could have and your humor has made us laugh until we cried. Best wishes as you begin to make your new and exciting dreams come true. Remember we love you very, very much!

Love forever,
Mum and Dad

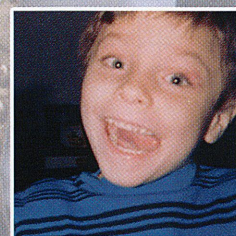

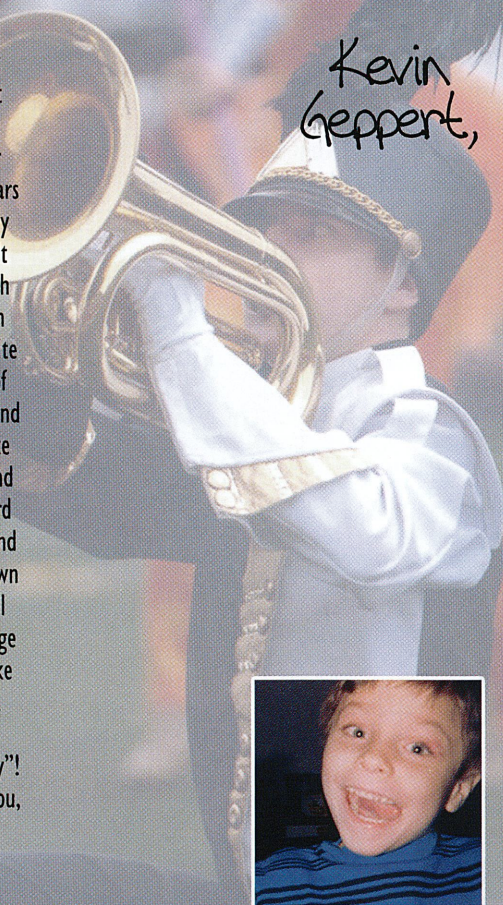

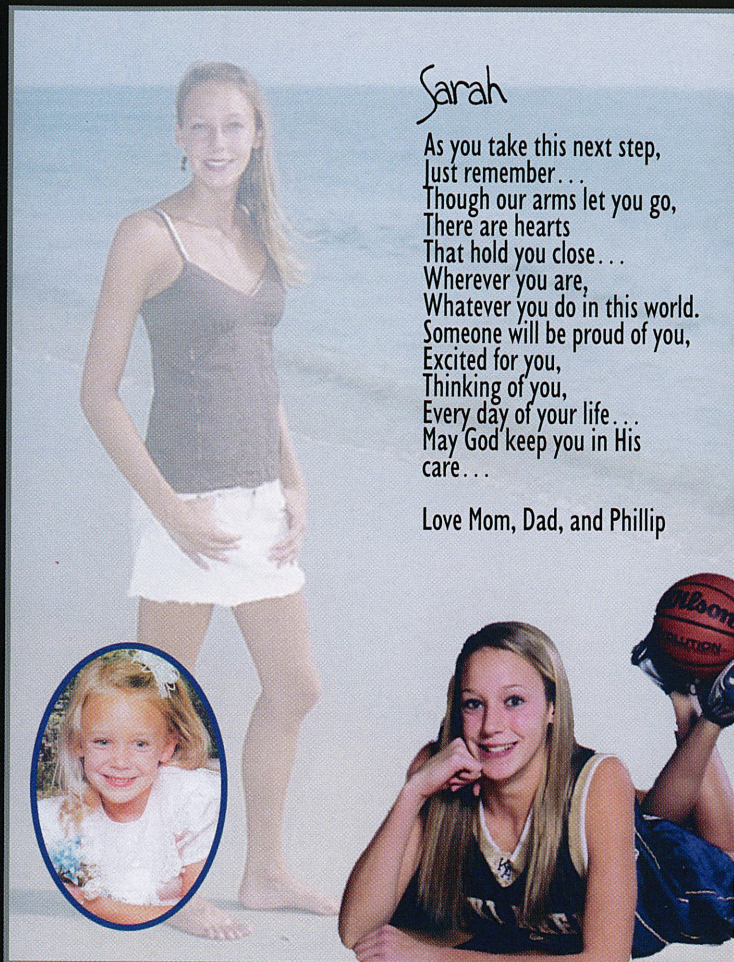

My son, don't forget my teaching, but let your heart keep my commandments; for length of days and years of life, and peace they will add to you. Don't let kindness and truth leave you; bind them around your neck, write them on the tablet of your heart. So you'll find favor and good repute in the sight of God and man. Trust in the Lord with all your heart, and do not lean on your own understanding. In all your ways acknowledge Him, and He will make your paths straight.

You're still our "Bubby"! We're very proud of you, Kev!

As you take this next step,
Just remember...
Though our arms let you go,
There are hearts
That hold you close...
Wherever you are,
Whatever you do in this world.
Someone will be proud of you,
Excited for you,
Thinking of you,
Every day of your life...
May God keep you in His care...

From Cradle to College and from Rocking Chair to Rav4...

The time has now come to enter a new and exciting part of your life. Your exceptional kindness, knowledge, and strength of character have made you grow to become a beautiful, gifted, young lady.

You have made us all very proud of your many accomplishments. We know you will continue your success, both academically and athletically at the University of Pittsburgh. We, as always, will be with you in support every step of the way in all your future endeavors.

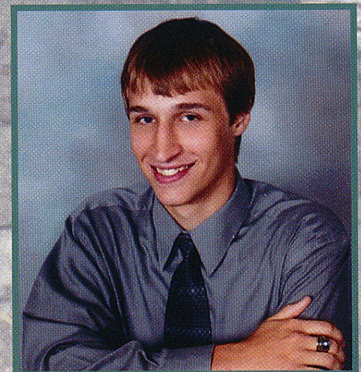

Love you
sweetie,
Mom and Dad

We are so proud of you! We are looking forward to the wonderful life you are going to live and we are so blessed to be a part of it. You are the best of both of us!!

Love,
Mom and Dad

Asa,

Deanna,

Our little princess, you have matured into a beautiful young woman who has given us so many precious memories. As you move on to the next chapter of your life, remember it was your values and determination that led you toward success. We look forward to all the great things you will do in the future. We will always be very proud of you, Deanna, and everything you have accomplished. Remember that we will always be here for you and support you in anything and everything that you do.

All our love,
Mom, Dad, and Shelby

Dear Krista,

Where has the time gone?
It seems like only yesterday you were just starting school and playing your first game of soccer. Now you have just made one of the most difficult decisions of your life, choosing to go to Penn State for college.

We are all so very proud of you. We love you very much and wish you all the best as you start your college journey.

Love,
Mom, Dad and Zachary

Dave-

From the little boy who wanted to be a Ninja turtle, to the young man who became a black belt in Tae Kwon
Do, to the Private First Class soldier you are today. We are very proud of you and all of your accomplishments.
Congratulations Dave. We love you and wish you all the best.

Love, Mom and Dad

Jacqueline-

Where has the time gone? It seems like only yesterday that you followed your sisters around. When they were getting ready for the prom,
you had to dress up and act like you were going to the prom too. You have become a beautiful young woman inside and out. You can become anything you want with hard work and determination. We are so proud of you and how far you've come. We look forward to watching you accomplish your goals.

We Love
You,

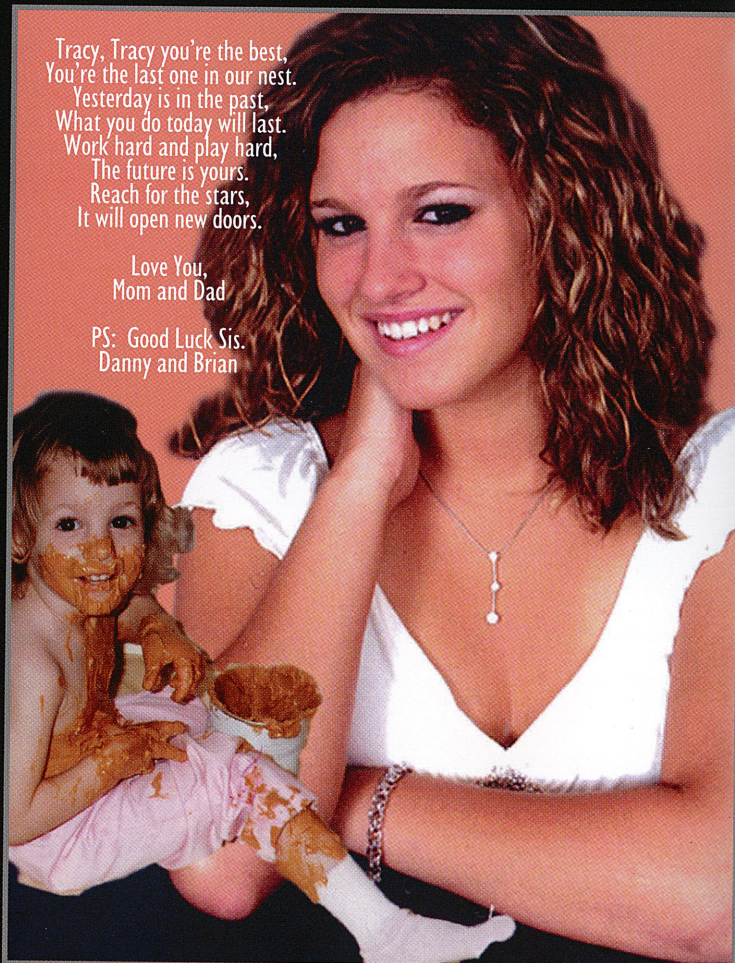

Mom,
Dad,
Jesse,
and Sarah

Tracy, Tracy you're the best.
You're the last one in our nest.
Yesterday is in the past.
What you do today will last.
Work hard and play hard,
The future is yours.
Reach for the stars,
It will open new doors.

Love You,
Mom and Dad

PS: Good Luck Sis.
Danny and Brian

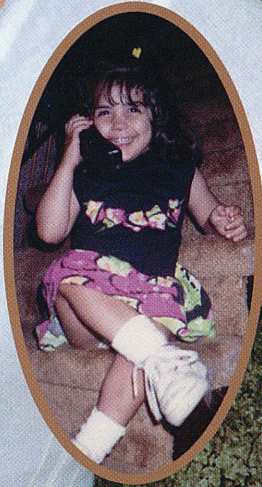

Danielle,

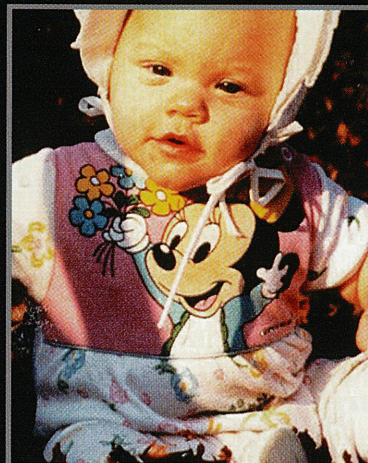

Nana says: "Your life is your gift from God. What you do with it is your gift to God." We know that in all of the wonderful things that you have accomplished so far, this is just the beginning of your journey of "gifts." We are so very proud of you.

Love,
Mom, Dad,

"Thank you so much, Mom and Dad, for everything you've done for me. You were always there for me and supported me in everything I did. I really appreciated everything. You guys are the best parents ever."

Sara Rattay, 12

Jamene,

You have been such a joy in our lives that is hard to let you go, yet we know you are ready and prepared. Watching you explore life has given us such pride in you. As a baby you had to touch and examine each leaf. As you grew into a beautiful young woman, your zeal for life has never wavered. You gave me such faith every morning, thank you. As you go yet onto another phase in your life, I know that everything you do, you'll explore and test. By God's grace you are here, and with God's grace you will achieve what His plan is for you. May you always meet the world with your head up and smiling and know that in one hand is ours and in your other hand is the Lord holding you.

Love you little, love you big, love you like a little pig.

Love Mom & Dad

To Our Daughter,
Michelle Ann

When you were born, we held you in our arms and just kept smiling at you. You always smiled back, your big eyes wide open, full of love. You were such a beautiful, sweet baby.

Now as we watch you grow up and become your own person, we look at you, your laughter, your happiness, your simplicity and we want to tell you that we are so proud of you and love you dearly.

Kekey,

Ashley,

To our cheer princess #1.

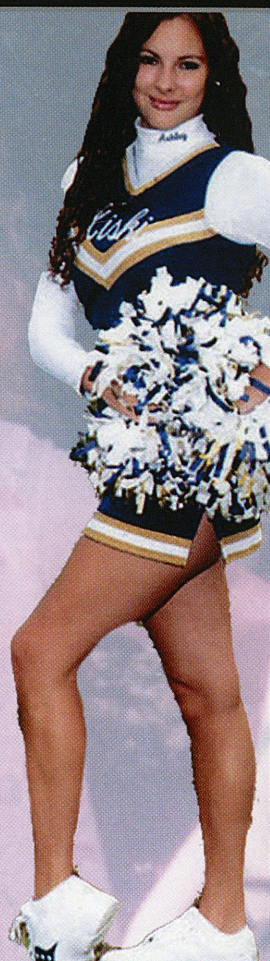

It seems like yesterday when you started kindergarten, now you are graduating from high school.

From a shy little girl, you developed into a confident young woman. We are so proud of you and all of your accomplishments. Thank you for giving us wonderful memories.

Whether it was watching you cheer, compete, walk through the house with your arms going everywhere like you're doing cheers, or just being Ashley!

Your journey has a new path for you and we know you will succeed in whatever you choose. Just remember we will always be there for you.

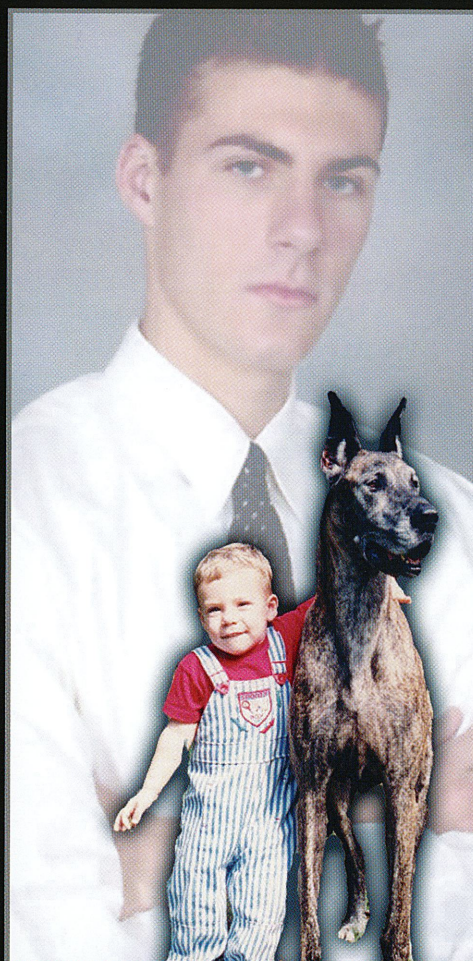

Love you,
Mom, Dad and the rest of the Schwarz Bunch.

Brad-

Sharing your life and experiencing you grow into a wonderful, caring person these past 18 years has been our honor and pleasure. You are a young man mature beyond your years, always remaining dedicated and focused on everything you do. You have laid a solid foundation for the future and we are certain you will continue to enjoy life and have many successes. Best of luck and remember: Twenty years from now you will be more disappointed by the things that you didn't do than by the ones you did. So, explore, dream, and always say it like you mean it!

Love,
Mom, Dad and Tara

Kelly

It is a joy to have you as a daughter! Your laughter, integrity, strength, and faith shine through all that you do. We wish you joy as you continue your journey and wisdom to know that God is holding your hand.

Love you lots and lots,

Mom, Daddy, Will,
Jackie & Chris

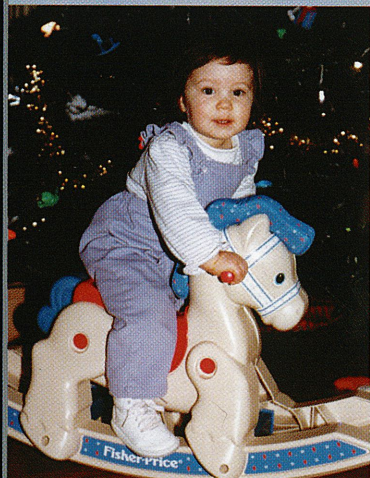

You've come so far and we are so proud of you. We know you'll go far, but remember to keep God as your pilot (not copilot).

Remember James 4: 8

"Draw near to God, and he will draw near to you."

Love Dad, Cherie & Jessica

Michele,

We have watched you grow into a fine young lady. You have made us proud with all of your accomplishments. Continue to strive for the best in life. May all of your dreams come true.

Congrats!

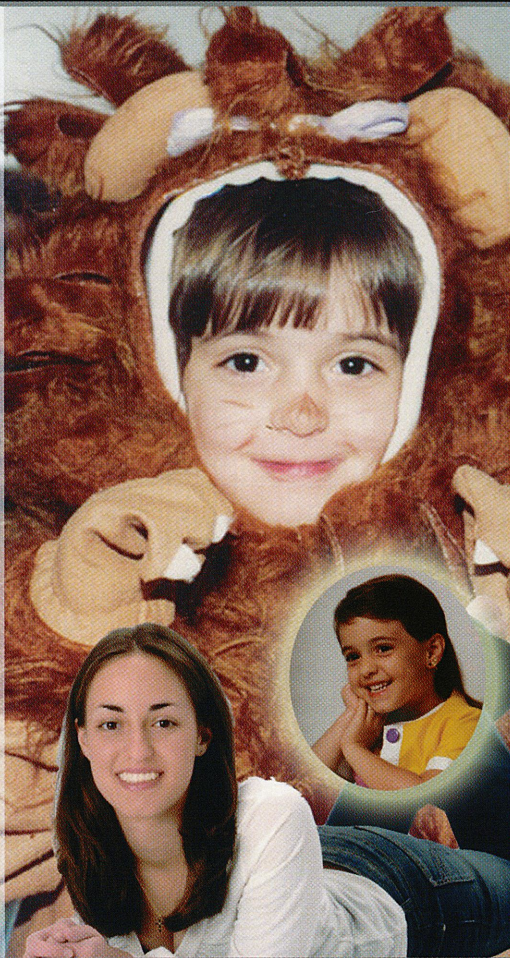

Love Always,
Mom, Dad,
and Mike

Samantha,

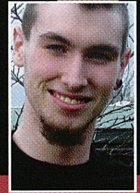

I can't believe you are graduating. You have always been so mature beyond your years. You were a truly wonderful baby and an unbelievable toddler. Now, as a teenager, you are a beautiful adult. We have always been so very proud of you and what you have accomplished. I know you'll make us proud at college and in whatever you do. Go and make your mark, baby girl! We will always be here for you!

Love,
Mom, Dad,
and Eric

"I wanted to thank my parents for putting up with my uniqueness."

We are so proud of you! You have always been such a wonderful son.

We wish you good health, success, and much happiness all the days of your life. We love you!! Mom and Dad

Darbi-

There's a right time for everything...

"A right time to cry and another to laugh...
A right time to lament and another to cheer...
A right time to hold on and another to let go..."

Now is your time to shine...
Now is your time to dream...

It is our time to proudly share your joy and to watch and wait as you are given the desires of your heart.

You've made us proud, you make us proud, and we'll always be proud of the young woman you are!

We love you!
Dad & Mom, Seth & Pam, Derek and Delanie

Megan,

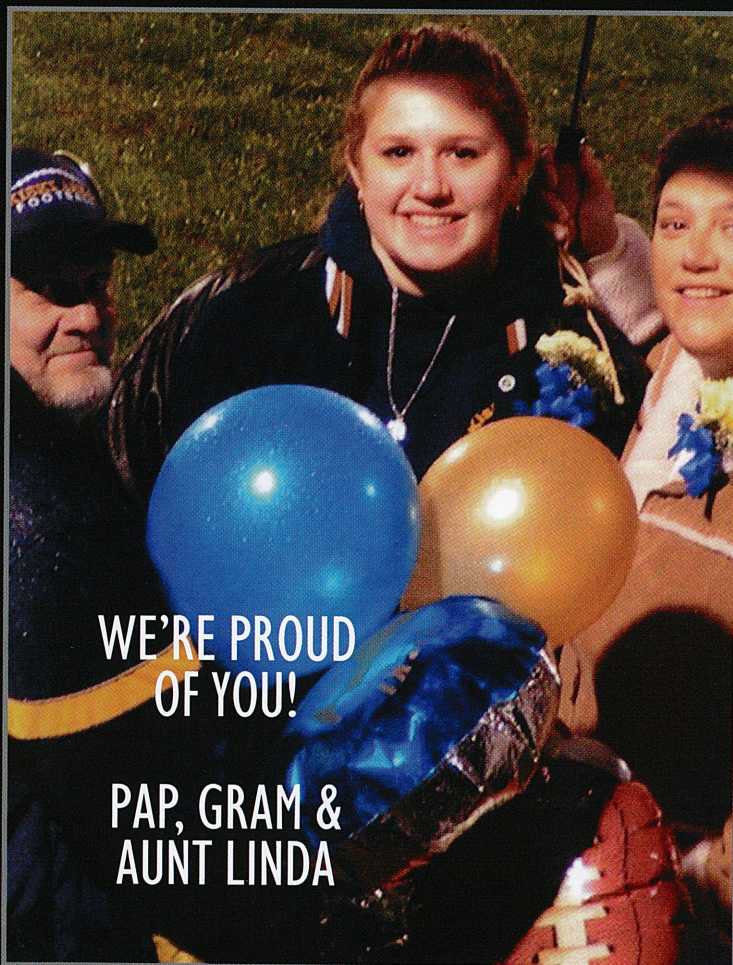

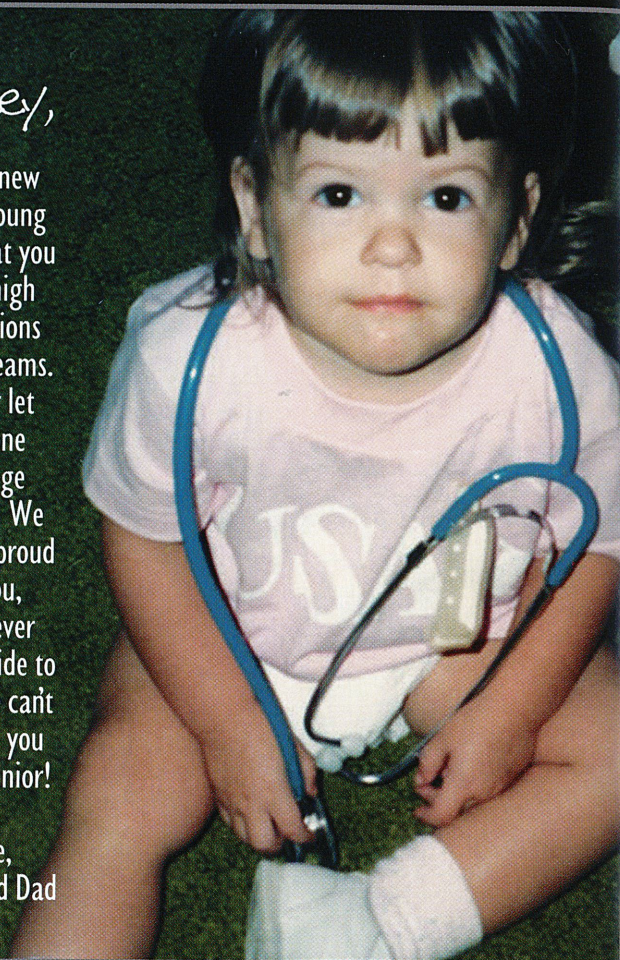

Through tough times and fun times you've always been a very strong person. Ahead of you lie many more challenges which you will have to face. Stay strong, continue to make the best decisions, and you will go so far in life. Remember to trust in yourself and everyone that loves you.

Love you always,
Dad, Mom, Tom,
Gram & Pap

Stacey,

You knew at a young age that you had high ambitions and dreams. Never let anyone change these! We will be proud of you, whatever you decide to be! We can't believe you are a senior!

Red hair, brown eyes,
Her smile a mile wide.

First born, Daddy's girl,
Her parents' joy and pride.

Grade school, junior high,
Hanging out with friends.

High school, lots of clubs,
When will it ever end?

Sports teams, training room,
She made the track team too.

Honor roll, NHS,
Her parents' pride just grew.

Little girl, bright young woman,
The time has gone so fast.

Mermaid dolls and softball games,
All memories from the past.

Graduation, cap and gown,
College right behind.

Packing, moving, spending money,
It boggles a parent's mind!!

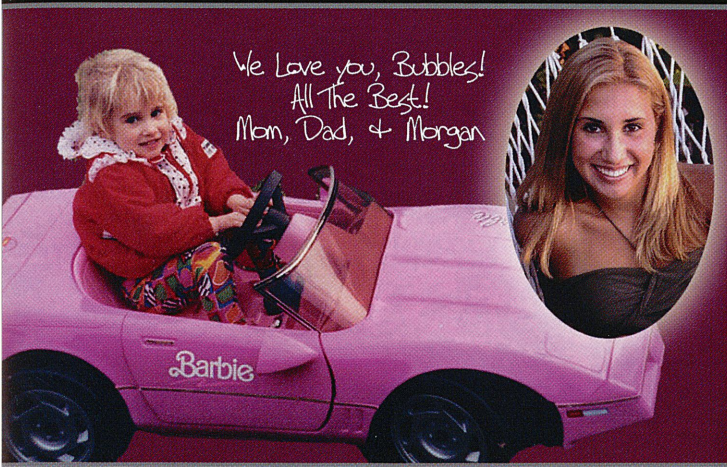

The day will come, she'll move away,
The trials she'll rise above.

Wherever she goes, she'll never be alone,
She'll carry her parents' love.

We love you more than life itself.
Know that we are and have always been extremely proud of you and your accomplishments. The world is yours for the taking. Go for it!!!

Kristen,

We have been blessed to have such a talented and compassionate daughter. You have excelled scholastically and in front of a soccer goal. Your video productions are works of art. You have generously donated your time for years, volunteering at the Pet Connection cat shelter.

It's hard to believe that our cute, little daughter has grown up to become such a lovely, young lady. We are very proud of you. Best of luck in college and beyond!

Casey,

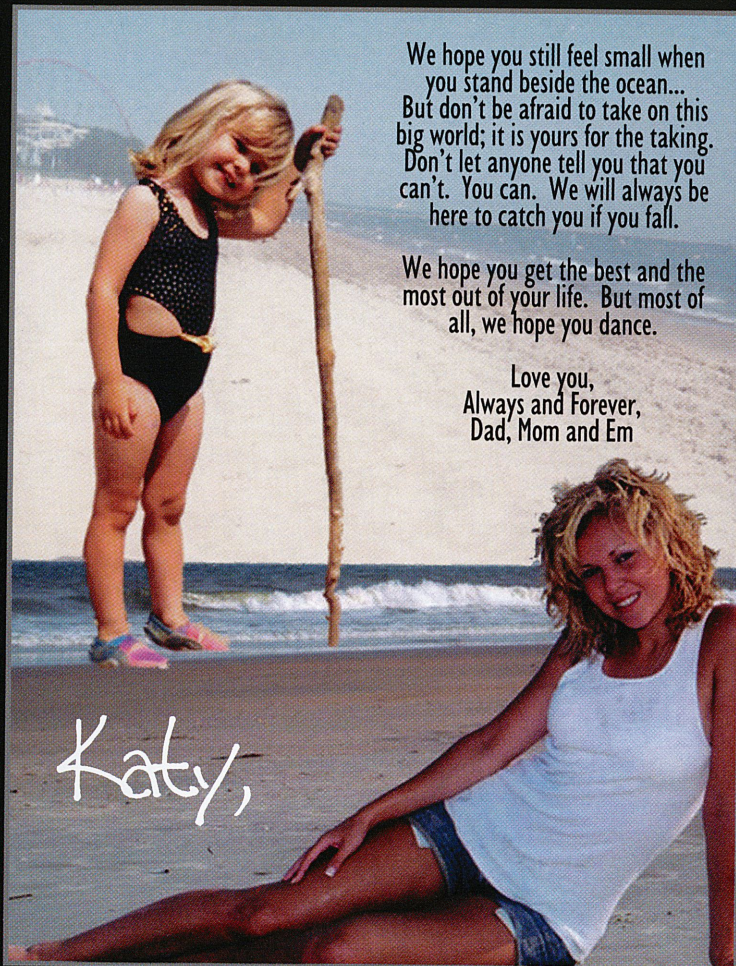

They say we are "angels in waiting," earning our wings each time we show others we care. Even at a very young age, a career in nursing seemed like perfect fit for one so caring and mature. From caring for your brothers and great-grandmother, to holding down two jobs, and still being an honor student...

...we cannot express how proud we are of the person you have become... a great heart, companionate soul, and talented young lady! Now it is time to use your "wings", and shoot for the moon. Even if you miss, you will land among the stars.

Thanks for being you, and making it so easy for us to be your parents. With all of your love and great pride, please know, we will always be there for you.

Mom, Russ, Dad, Laura, Corey, Leslie, Eric, Megan, Annie, Chelsea, Michael, and Donovan.

We hope you still feel small when you stand beside the ocean... But don't be afraid to take on this big world; it is yours for the taking. Don't let anyone tell you that you can't. You can. We will always be here to catch you if you fall.

We hope you get the best and the most out of your life. But most of all, we hope you dance.

Love you,
Always and Forever,
Dad, Mom and Em

Katy,

We can't even begin to tell you how proud we are of you. We were blessed from the moment you were born; you made us a family. We can still see you coming home from school that very first day, telling us that you had the best time! You have grown from an inquisitive, enthusiastic child into an intelligent, caring, talented, and driven (especially when it comes to fishing and hunting,) young man. You have worked so hard and we know that you will continue to do so in college and in life.

Our hope for you as you graduate from high school is that you will find a clear direction for your life, a career that you love, and happiness in your days. You are an incredible son and big brother.

Your grandmas would be so proud.

Scott,

To Our Dearest

You were a beautiful baby, from the outside in.

Chase your dreams, but always know the road that will lead you home again.

Go on... take on this whole world.

But to me, you know you'll always be, "our" little girl.

We are all so proud of you..

Go for your goals; follow your dreams..

We love you..

Cara,

Wow! Look at how you have grown from our sweet, little girl into a beautiful, intelligent, and awesome young woman. We are amazed at all of your accomplishments; everything you put your mind to, you succeed at. We are so proud. You have worked very hard and deserve the best of what life has to offer.

You have the foundation; now pursue your dreams...

We love you.
Mom, Dad,
Danielle, and

Ross,

So here you are that this important crossroad of life. Such a short time ago, your life was school projects & plays; practices & performances; soccer camps & hockey games; homework & holidays.

You have grown from that adventurous little boy into a wonderful young man. And along the way, you have had many challenges and obstacles. You not only met them, but you overcame each one... and each one made you a better, stronger, wiser person. But, along the way, you never forgot your friends, your family, or your faith.

So, as you tread this new path, never forget that we are so very proud of all you have done, confident in all that you will do, and delighted at the young man that you have become. It has been a joy and a privilege to be your parents.

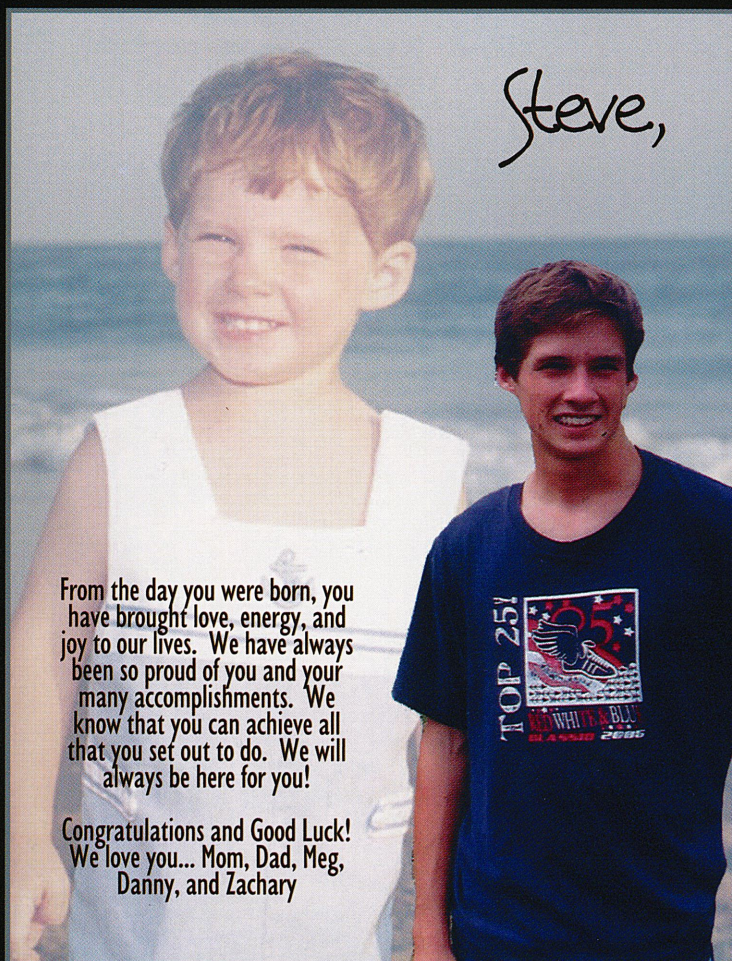

All Our Love,
Mom and Dad

Steve,

From the day you were born, you have brought love, energy, and joy to our lives. We have always been so proud of you and your many accomplishments. We know that you can achieve all that you set out to do. We will always be here for you!

Congratulations and Good Luck!
We love you... Mom, Dad, Meg,
Danny, and Zachary

From loving sister to loyal friend, you have become a lovely young woman through your God given talents and quiet confidence.

Congratulations on an outstanding high school career. Follow your dreams at CMU. Let your voice be heard. You have what it takes to reach out and make a special place in the world for yourself and others.

Remember, you will always be our sweet little girl and we will always be here for you.

Much love,
Mom, Dad, and Max

Rachel

Krystal,

Looking back through the years when we lived in Germany 'til now, time went by so fast. We can't believe you are graduating and turning into a young adult. We are so proud of you and your accomplishments.

We wish you success in the future with your career in Nursing. Be confident and know that we will support you in every step of your journey through life.

LOVE, Mom & Dad

Renee,

I am so very proud of you, Renee. Know that I am ALWAYS here for you, even on the days it rains on your parade. Keep smiling, stay happy, and live each day to the fullest.

Love,
Mom

Zane,

Watching you grow up taught us that time moves many ways at once: fast and slow, forward and backward, bitter and sweet. At times, it seemed like we looked away for a single moment... and you were grown. Other times, nothing much seemed to happen for years... school, summer, and baseball... another calendar filled with the blur of events that make up family life. And one day, while we weren't looking... a blink of an eye... you jumped the fence into a young man. What a mystery it is. What a great young man you are. And what gratitude we feel for the privilege of watching you grow, helping when we could, and simply being a part of your life.

Love you bunches
Mom and Dad

Nichol -

To our little firecracker!

Wishing you all the luck and happiness in your future to come. And remember, life is what you make of it, so give it your all. There's so much more out there in the world for you; just reach out and grab it. And don't ever let go, for all your wishes will come true. We love you more than words can say and couldn't be any more proud of you than we are today.

Congratulations and good luck...

Love you always...

Congratulations. You have become such a wonderful, responsible young woman.
We are so proud of you.
Always believe in yourself and you will succeed.
Follow your dreams and know that we'll always be here for you.

God has truly blessed us with you. May he continue to bless you and watch over you,
in all that you do.

All our love,

Jenna -

It's hard to believe how this day has come so quickly... from our cute little Jenna Baby to a beautiful young woman in the blink of an eye. You've made us proud over the years and something tells me you're not done yet!

Believe you hold the power to make things happen. One of life's most important lessons involves the power of family.

We will love you always and forever.

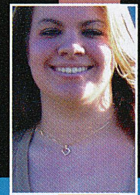

Love,

Evan,

As you ride off to college, remember how hard new tricks were to learn. But, with determination, you accomplished your goals. May you reach new heights at Pitt!!

We love you!
Mom Dad and Lena

On April 8, 1989, we were blessed with an adorable baby girl. Your eyes were so wide open as if to say, "Here I am world!" What a precious moment that was. We'll never forget it. And here you are... 18, all grown up, eyes still wide open with continuous joy, and exhilaration in everything that you do.

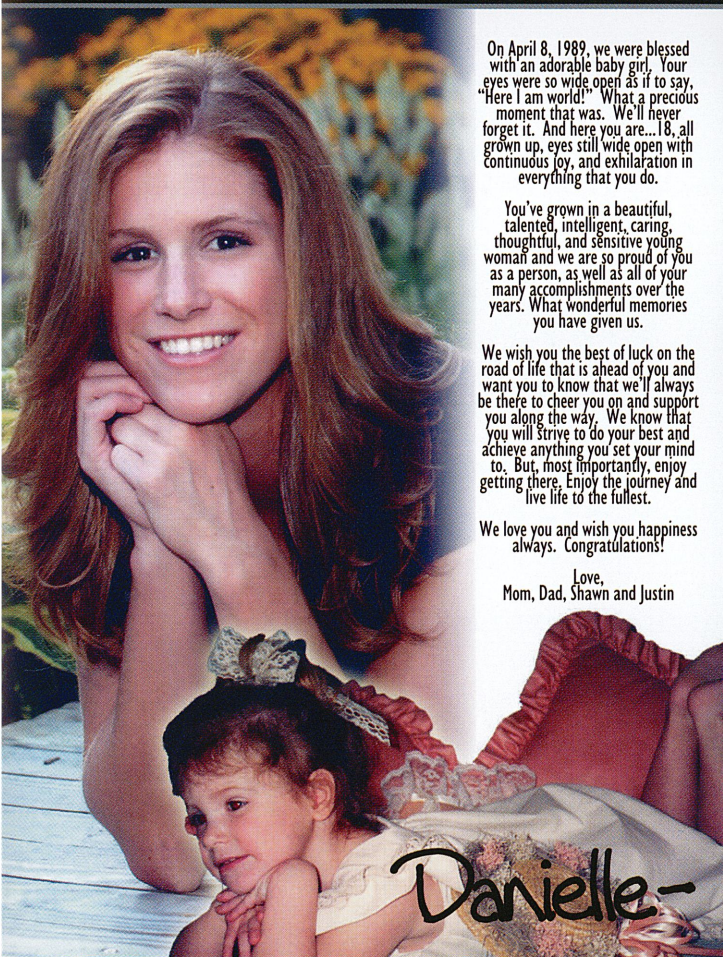

You've grown in a beautiful, talented, intelligent, caring, thoughtful, and sensitive young woman and we are so proud of you as a person, as well as all of your many accomplishments over the years. What wonderful memories you have given us.

We wish you the best of luck on the road of life that is ahead of you and want you to know that we'll always be there to cheer you on and support you along the way. We know that you will strive to do your best and achieve anything you set your mind to. But, most importantly, enjoy getting there, enjoy the journey and live life to the fullest.

We love you and wish you happiness always. Congratulations!

Love,
Mom, Dad, Shawn and Justin

Danielle -

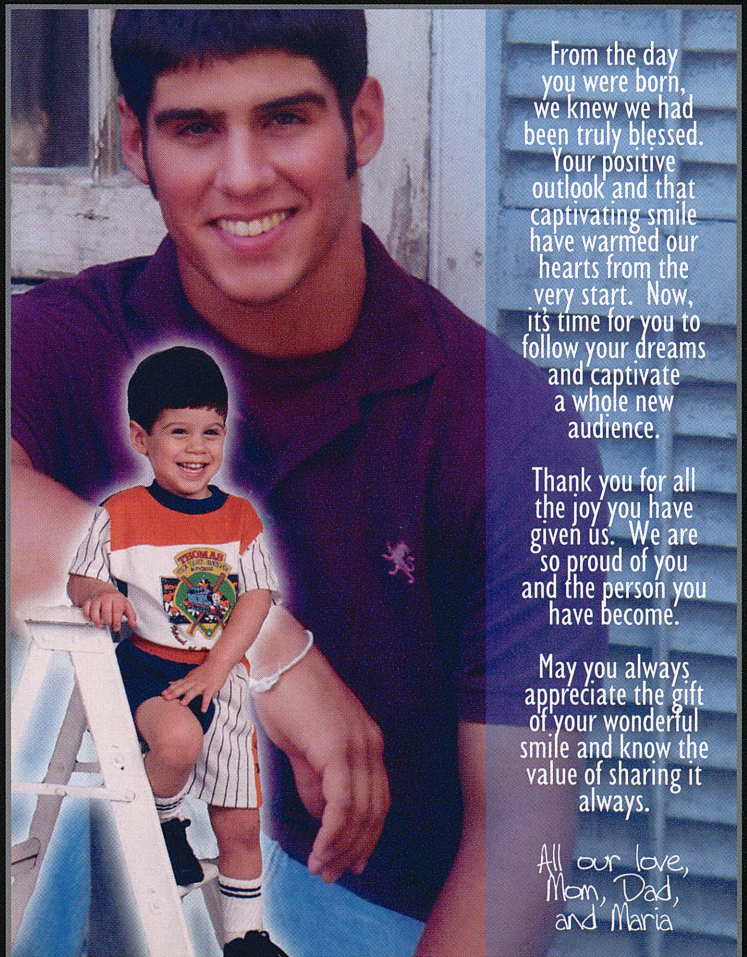

From the day you were born, we knew we had been truly blessed. Your positive outlook and that captivating smile have warmed our hearts from the very start. Now, it's time for you to follow your dreams and captivate a whole new audience.

Thank you for all the joy you have given us. We are so proud of you and the person you have become.

May you always appreciate the gift of your wonderful smile and know the value of sharing it always.

All our love,
Mom, Dad,
and Maria

Jami,

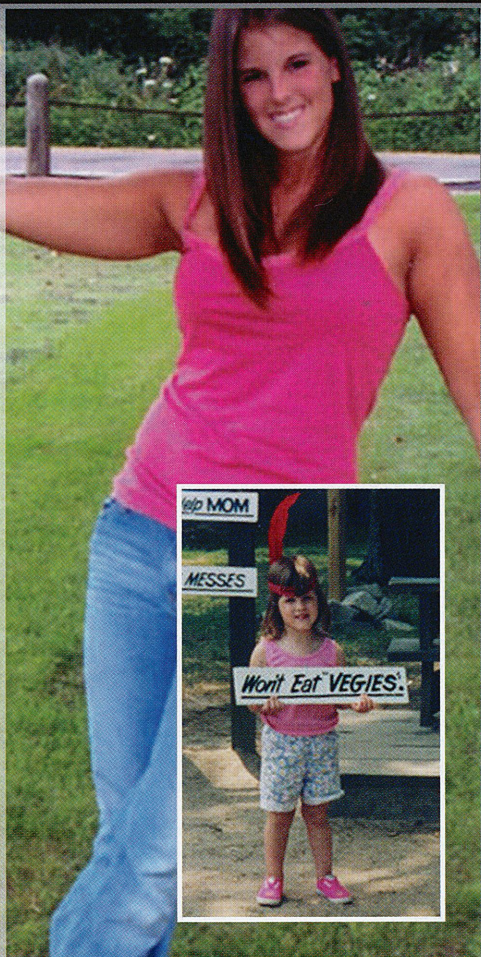

It seems like yesterday that we followed your kindergarten bus to school. We watched you grow into a beautiful young woman. Every step of the way you have made us proud with your intelligence, maturity, independence, and loving ways.

Go confidently in the direction of your dreams, live the life that you have imagined, and most of all, find happiness in all that you do.

Remember that we will always be here for you!

ALL OUR LOVE,
Mom, Dad, John and Bradley

P.S. Eat those veggies!!

Autumn,

The years passed quickly as I watched you grow into a beautiful young lady. With all your strength and a positive outlook on life, you have proven that nothing is impossible to achieve. May there always be in your life new beginnings, good friends, and love. Your being, your laughter, and your smile have changed our life forever. You are truly a gift from God.

Love Mom
and Dad

Looking back over the years makes us smile. We are so fortunate to have had such a wonderful child who turned out to be an AMAZING adult.

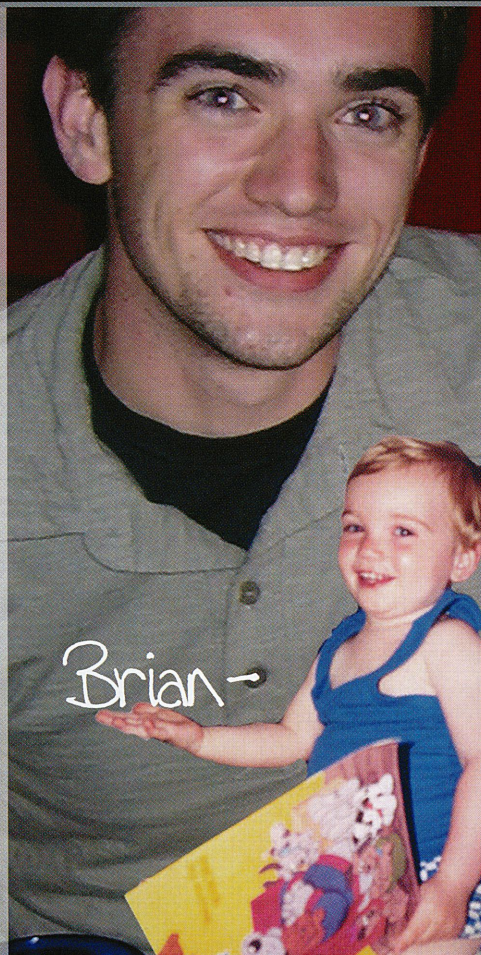

We hope your future holds everything you wish for.

Just remember...

Be true to yourself,
Remember we love
and support you, Intelligence is something you're born with,
Attitude is everything.
Never doubt your potential or ability.

Looking forward to the next chapter in your life.
We love you!

"When you follow your bliss... doors will open where you would not have thought there would be doors...and where there wouldn't be a door for anyone else."

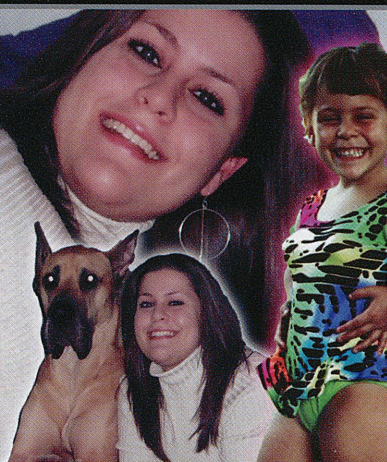

To My Dearest Lauren,

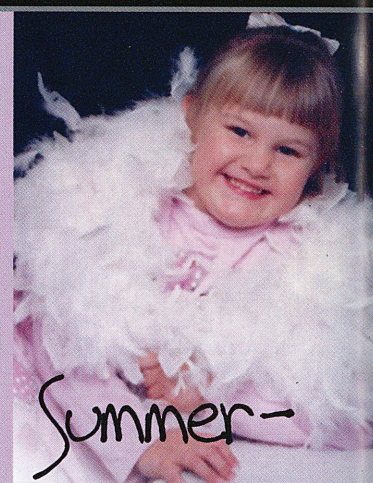

Moms are always full of advice...
But here's some good advice...

Be kind to everyone...
Be good to yourself...
Be a giver, not a taker...
Live every day to the fullest...
Don't wish the weekend to be here;
that's only wishing your life away.

I love you, Mommy

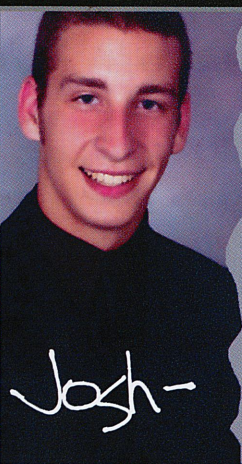

The last 18 years have gone by so fast. You are all grown up now, but you will always be my little girl. You have lost many loved ones throughout the years, but remember that they are always watching over you from above... just as I will always be watching over you throughout your entire life whenever you need me.

Summer-

I will always be here for you to lean on. You have a mind of your own. You always push yourself harder than anyone I know to do your best and that is all you need to do. Your determination will get you far in life.

Love, Mom

Josh-

Grandson,

YOU DID IT!

You have made us so proud. From the minute you took your first breath, we wanted nothing but the very best for you.

You may find that the world may not always be kind to you or what you want it to be, but always know that we will be there as that unspoken guide. When you need someone to just listen, or need to talk, or to support you when you think there is nowhere else to go, we will be there. And know as long as our hearts beat, you will always have a comfort zone and a place to call home.

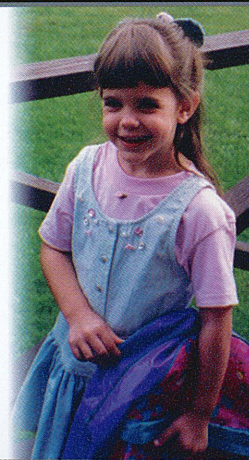

Our love and the word "infinity" share something special; they are one in the same. We love you and are so very proud of you.

Moore School Bus Inc.

Celebrating 60 Years of Excellent and Safe Service

Known as "Old Blue," this 1938 Mack bus carried students to school every day. At the time, the state government did not require many standards for school busing. While school buses today don National School Bus Chrome Yellow, buses back then appeared in colors such as orange, red, green, and blue. During the World War years, some owners painted their buses in patriotic red, white, and blue.

Congratulations Class of 2007!

Carrying on a recent Moore Bus Inc. tradition, one of the buses displays holiday cheer in twinkling form. The drivers originally decided to decorate one of the buses to show spirit in the community. Many passer-bys have taken time to stop at the garage to offer positive comments about the twinkling bus.

Devoted mechanic Randy Emerick applies his magic to the heart of bus 70. Hired in 1983, Randy has helped to keep the fleet healthy and safe for the children of the Kiski District. Randy's daughter Sarah belonged the graduating class of 2007.

Young Cherise, Kevin, and Darwin Moore stand in front of a 1955 Ford bus in the late fall of 1966. Buses such as this typically held 60 students who sat three people to a seat. In the 1950's the Transportation Advisory Board in Harrisburg mandated that all Pennsylvania school buses display black fenders. Workers at Moore had to spray paint their fenders to comply to the requested standards.

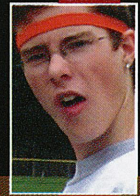

On March 12-13, 1993, a blizzard brought the Pittsburgh area to a standstill. Snowing at a rate of 2-3 inches per hour, the storm accumulated a shocking 25 inches of snow. Workers spent countless hours plowing the heavy snow and sweeping it off the buses.

The Founders

Original founders
Henry & Maebelle
Barron

Bill & Lonnie
Moore

Lorin, Kevin,
& Darwin Moore

1947 - Henry and Maebelle Barron moved to Washington Twp. from Somerset and purchased a fleet of 23 buses from Vandergrift Motor Coach to transport school children in five townships: Allegheny, Bell, Franklin, Upper Burrell, and Washington. The very first day, they had 7 tire blowouts.

1972 - Henry and Maebelle retired and Bill and Lonnie Moore purchased the fleet. They changed the name to Moore School Bus Transportation. A new school bus then cost $8,000.

1973 - The gasoline shortage began. At times, allotments of gasoline did not arrive, causing drivers to fuel up at local gas stations before afternoon runs.

1977 - Severe winter weather caused school to close 13 days. School finished on June 22nd.

1980 - An unforgettable day, November 17th, the area experienced a warm, slippery snowstorm. The last kids left the junior high at 4:00 pm and arrived home more than four-and-half hours later at 8:40 pm. The last bus, which had gotten stuck, finally arrived at 11:00 pm. The fleet received a letter of commendation from the School Board for the skill and dedication shown by the drivers.

1983 - A teachers' strike had school ending on June 30th.

1992 - The state required school bus drivers to get CDL's.

1995 - Another new law mandated random alcohol and drug testing of all drivers with a CDL.

2002 - Bill and Lonnie retired and the third generation took over the business. The three brothers, Kevin, Lorin, and Darwin now work together to haul the "World's Most Precious Cargo".

2002 - Owners built a new building that holds 30 buses. Now, the entire daily fleet of 52 buses fits inside.

2005 - Who could have foreseen that fuel prices would increase 170% in just a few years?

2007 - April 1st, new state law required new school bus drivers to become fingerprinted. New buses cost just over $70,000.

In the midst of the most winter snow that the district has seen in nearly a decade, seniors Anthony McGraw, Karissa Lloyd, Kevin Mottura, freshman Alan Lloyd, and senior Autumn Armagost spend a January Sunday evening sled riding down a hill in senior Caitlin Floyd's backyard in Washington Township. "For four years, we haven't had the chance to really get together to play in the snow. This year really made up for the years without. We had a blast," said Karissa. The group of adventure goers have enjoyed each other's company for over five years.

"Being a summer girl, I really didn't like the cold. Still, I loved sled riding on the days we had off."

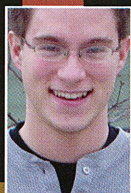

Britni Waddell, 12

For the first time in years, an abundance of frozen water crystals formed, and as they fell, they articulated to create many snowflakes. An intricately fashioned grid/work of these individually unique pieces of artwork blanketed the area. The landscape appeared as a diamond-encrusted coverlet. The snowfall occurred under specific conditions, and the many components manifested their uniqueness, almost as unique as we who lived through it. Within days the snow had melted, those tiny jewels vanished, but the memories of those days remained, the purity, the glitter, the ephemeral nature. We flourished in this time of our lives and like the covering of crystals, we too had our moments to shine.

Closing Story by Alex Nigra

grid/work

"I am grateful for the education that I received at Kiski. The teachers built a grid/work for me to expand upon in college. One day, I might return the favor and teach to future students in the district."

Lyle Clark, 12

The 2006-2007 Campus yearbook represented the 45th for Kiski Area High School - 200 Poplar Street - Vandergrift, PA 15690 - Telephone: 724-845-8181. The staff ordered 1175 copies from Taylor Publishing Company - 1550 W. Mockingbird Lane - Dallas, TX 75235. Cari Frei represented the book locally and Steve Pinder served as the Account Executive. The total staff consisted of 16 editors and 22 other staff members.

This book employed a Smyth type binding with 100# enamel paper for all 272 pages inside. The yearbook staff utilized Adobe InDesign CS2 and Adobe Photoshop CS2 to create the publication. Fonts used included Eric Condensed and Tall Paul. The staff had signatures 11 and 13 short trimmed. The cover displayed material Black 075 with UV Varnish and 4 die-cut holes. The plant printed the endsheets using a 4-color process.

Gary Gibson - Studio G - 202 Longfellow Street - Vandergrift, PA 15690 - Telephone: 724-567-1500 - provided all of the club, sports team, musical ensemble, and senior portraits for the book. Paige Duckworth - Hourglass Studio - 2 Labelle Vue Rd. - Vandergrift, PA 15690 - Telephone: 724-568-3128 - provided all of the underclass panel pictures, the football and wrestling team pictures, and the marching band picture. The photography editors shot all candid pictures using a Canon Rebel camera.

The Kiski High School Yearbook Staff belonged to several professional organizations that included PSPA and CSPA. The 2006 Campus book received a Silver rating from CSPA and also appeared in the Featured section of Taylor's elite compilation book, The Yearbook Yearbook. Taylor Publishing also selected the yearbook as a company sample.
